THINKING OF FARNUM, CALLED HIM 'DEARIE'

Mrs. Gould Apologized to Chauffeur for Mistake in St. Regis, He Testifies.

HOWARD GOULD AS "CUPID"

At a Ball in France Where Knowles Appeared as Trilby—Farnum as Mrs. Gould's "New Beau."

The proceedings yesterday in the trial before Supreme Court Justice Dowling of the separation suit brought by Mrs. Viola Katherine Gould against Howard Gould were almost wholly concerned in an inquiry as to the relationship existing between Mrs. Gould and Dustin Farnum, the actor. Former employes of the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel, Philadelphia, and the Marlborough-Blenheim, at Atlantic City, where Mrs. Gould and Farnum stayed in October, 1906, were called to support Mr. Gould's contention that he had been justified in leaving his wife by reason of her conduct.

At the morning session no little amusement was caused when Henry H. Knowles, an insurance man, of 56 West Thirty-third Street, an elderly, stout, jolly-looking man with almost a perpetual smile, was telling of a masked ball he attended at Nice, France, in the Spring of 1906. Mr. and Mrs. Gould were present, while Lord Royston also formed one of the party, which had motored down from Paris.

Mr. Shearn, in cross-examining the witness, asked him what costume he wore.

"Trilby," replied Mr. Knowles, raising a laugh in which he joined.

"And Mr. Gould was Svengali?" asked Mr. Shearn, sniffing.

"No; he went as Cupid."

The general laugh that followed was only restrained by the loud banging of the gavel by Justice Dowling.

What costume Mrs. Gould wore did not come out, Mr. Knowles simply saying that she wore one. Neither counsel pressed the matter further.

Says Drink Transformed Mrs. Gould.

Mr. Knowles was the second of the personal friends of the Howard Goulds to testify so far for Mr. Gould. He said he first became intimately acquainted with the Goulds when he was invited to dinner at the St. Regis, in the Fall of 1904. He had had a bowing acquaintance with Mr. Gould for some time before that.

Asked when he first noticed Mrs. Gould's fondness for liquor, he said it was while dining with the Goulds at the St. Regis. She drank some wine, and shortly after he observed that her whole manner seemed to change "for the worse."

"When she was herself," said Mr. Knowles, "she was a most charming and agreeable woman—almost fascinating—but when she drank she became irritable and would begin to nag and say disagreeable and sarcastic things."

Mr. Knowles spent the Fall of 1905 and six months of 1906 in Europe. While in Paris in the Spring of 1906, he met Mr. and Mrs. Gould there, and they made up a party which included Lord Royston, and in a number of automobiles went on a trip to Nice, which lasted three or four days. Lord Royston, Mrs. Gould, and the witness occupied one car, he said, Mr. Gould and others bringing up the rear.

"All during the trip," said Mr. Knowles, "Mrs. Gould was continually complaining of the arrangements her husband had made. On one occasion she gave him a sound talking to because a courier did not meet the party at a certain place."

Petulant at Dinner Party.

He was then asked about a dinner party at Castle Gould in July, 1906. Mrs. Gould, who had been drinking, witness said, complained about the lettuce not being properly headed.

"She said with profanity it was Howard's fault through having a fool for gardener. She also complained of Malloy, the Superintendent of Castle Gould. I told her that while in Europe she had spoken highly of Malloy, but she kept on complaining about the lettuce, until finally Mr. Gould got up and left the table and consoled himself with a cigar."

Under cross-examination by Mr. Shearn the witness admitted that the address he had given, 56 West Thirty-third Street, was the Hotel Martinique, and that Mr. Gould was living there at present, but denied that he shared Mr. Gould's apartments.

Q.—Were you subpoenaed? A.—No.

Q.—Did you ever volunteer evidence before against a woman who had been your hostess?

Mr. Nicoll objected and was sustained.

Mr. Knowles said that he had been forty-five years in the insurance business and had been formerly connected with the Equitable Life Assurance Society.

Mr Shearn tried hard to find out why Mr. Knowles was absent from this country during Gov. Hughes's insurance investigation. The court, however, would not allow this line of questioning. Giving an instance of Mrs. Gould's irritability, the witness said, "If the weather was bad, it was Howard's fault."

A chauffeur formerly in the employ of Mrs. Gould—John J. Flynn of 28 Eighth Avenue, Astoria, L. I.—told how on one occasion when he went to report to Mrs. Gould at the St. Regis he was mistaken by her for Dustin Farnum, whom she was expecting. Flynn said that he went to Mrs. Gould's apartment and slightly opened the door.

Mistook Chauffeur for Farnum.

"All right, dearie, I will be there in a minute," Flynn said Mrs. Gould called out from an inner room. "In a few moments she appeared, putting on a loose wrapper," added Flynn. "When she saw it was me she said, 'Excuse me, John; I thought it was Mr. Farnum.' I laughed and she laughed."

Flynn testified that he was employed by Mrs. Gould for four months. After he had been there a few days he drove Mrs. Gould down to the Somerset Hotel, in West Forty-seventh Street, where Dustin Farnum was living, to deliver a letter for him. Farnum was not at home, so the letter was returned to Mrs. Gould.

The following day Mrs. Gould ordered him to drive her to West Forty-sixth Street, between Fifth and Sixth Avenues. This was in the afternoon. They stopped in the middle of the block, and Mrs. Gould ordered him to walk around to Fifth Avenue, while she remained in the car, and to look for a "fine-looking man with black hair and a big soft hat, whose name she said was Mr. Farnum." He did so, and saw a man, standing about twenty yards south of Forty-sixth Street on Fifth Avenue, answering the description.

"I asked him if he was Mr. Farnum. He said he was. I escorted him back to the car, where he shook hands with Mrs. Gould and got in. I drove them to the Broadway Theatre in Brooklyn. They went into Minden's Café near by and told me to be back in an hour. I then drove Mrs. Gould back to the St. Regis.

"A day or two later Mrs. Gould, during the morning, told me to go down to the Somerset Hotel and bring Mr. Farnum up to the St. Regis. I did so. He went to the office while I went around to another entrance and went to Mrs. Gould's apartments on the fifth floor." It was on this occasion, the witness

TO TAX VISITORS' AUTOS.

May Cost American $220 to Stay a Few Days in England.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, June 18.—Americans bringing motor cars to England will be liable to a heavy tax unless Mr. Lloyd-George alters his budget proposals. According to the Chancellor of the Exchequer's plans as they now stand, hapless visitors from across the Atlantic will have to pay a duty ranging from 2 guineas, or $10, on the smallest car, to 40 guineas, or $200, on a car of over sixty horse power.

There will also be the registration fee, the license fee, and the tax on the chauffeur as a male servant. Thus the American within our gates may have to pay as much as £44, or $220, even if he is only remaining in England for a few days.

This would be killing the goose that lays the golden eggs with a vengeance, and strenuous efforts are being made to show the Chancellor the error of his ways.

THREATS TO BLOW UP TRAINS.

Wabash Officials Capture a Suspect by Means of a Decoy Letter.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., June 18.—A plan for wrecking passenger trains between St. Louis and Edwardsville, Ill., and the destruction of property on a large scale was outlined in leters sent to officials of the Wabash Railroad, demanding $5,000 and threatening to explode mines on the right of way if the money was not forthcoming. Robert Lester Hayes has been arrested, and is held as the writer of the letters.

The writer offered to give proof by destroying a "wild-cat" engine. He also agreed, if the money was sent as demanded, to furnish a plat showing the location of the mines.

Since the arrest of Hayes, when he called at the Post Office for a letter sent by Vice President and General Manager Miller of the Wabash Railroad as a decoy, it has been learned that a correspondence was carried on with the letter writer by means of personal advertisements inserted in the newspapers.

For three weeks General Manager Miller of the Wabash has been receiving threatening letters. Thursday was the last day of grace allowed the officials of the road. Fifty men with lanterns walked up and down the tracks all night, and the crews on all trains were instructed to run at half speed between the two points and keep a sharp lookout. Nothing happened, and it is believed that the arrest of Hayes will put a stop to the letters.

BASEBALL PLAYED AT NIGHT.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, June 18.—Baseball at night seems assured, in view of the success that attended the first attempt to give such an exhibition by artificial light at Cincinnati League Park this evening.

To test the feasibility of such a venture a benefit game of nine innings was played by teams representing Elk lodges of Cincinnati and Newport, Ky. President Herrmann, who had at first intended to permit members of the Cincinnati team to participate, changed his mind and concluded not to allow his players to take any chances on the experiment, declaring they might suffer injuries that would impair their work in league games.

The game played by amateurs to-night was witnessed by members of the Cincinnati and Philadelphia teams. More than 3,000 persons were present.

The players had no difficulty in keeping their eyes on the ball. All of them seemed to perform as well as if it had been bright daylight. Long flies, balls that went high in the air as fouls, grounders, the pitchers' swiftest curves and slants were easily handled. Errors were marked up against players more because of lack of training than lack of light.

The scheme was a pronounced success, although the big league players who witnessed the contest expressed the opinion that there would have to be further improvement in the system of lighting before championship games may be played.

BIG LINERS CUT OCEAN RATE.

Fare on the Lusitania and Mauretania Now $2.50 Cheaper.

Steamship agents throughout the country were notified yesterday that the minimum rate on the Cunard liners Lusitania and Mauretania in the first cabin will be $125 instead of $127.50, as heretofore. Vernon H. Brown, General Manager of the Cunard Line in America, when asked as to the reason of the $2.50 reduction in the rate on the two big ships, said that so far as he knew it was simply a question of an equalization of rates, and had no special significance regarding any disagreement among the Atlantic steamship lines.

It was understood that the new minimum rate for the Lusitania and Mauretania was agreed upon at a conference between the representatives of the various lines held recently in London, when it was also decided to reduce the westward minimum rate of £25 10s. from Liverpool to New York to £25.

The minimum through rates to Paris remain the same for the present, it was said.

SUES FOR HIS BALD SPOT.

Trolley Company Says Alopecia Circumscripta, Not a Car Bump, Caused It

Whether Andrew Jablowski's bald spot was caused by a trolley car bump or by alopecia circumscripta is the point a jury will have to determine in the Circuit Court, Newark, in a suit for $5,000 damages to his locks brought by Jablowski against the Public Service Corporation. Jablowski denies that alopecia circumscripta had anything to do with the passing of his hair, and that the guilty party is the trolley concern.

At first no one knew about alopecia circumscripta, but Howard McSherry, counsel for the company, explained it was the hair trouble that populated first rows at theatres. Counsel for Jablowski said that it had nothing to do with Jablowski's bald spot, which came, he said, from a bump from a trolley car. The case is still on.

THEIR HONEYMOON IN BIG BALLOON

Roger N. Burnham, Sculptor, and Miss Eleanor H. Waring, Writer, to Sail in the Pittsfield.

WILL ASCEND AT MIDNIGHT

Pilot to Accompany Bridal Couple Who Don't Care How Long They Remain in the Clouds.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., June 18.—The first aerial honeymoon in America will start from the Pittsfield Aero Park tomorrow night about midnight, when Roger Noble Burnham, the Boston sculptor, 210 Winthrop Road, Brookline, and his bride, Miss Eleanor Howard Waring, the writer, of Brookline, will start for cloudland in the big balloon, Pittsfield, piloted by William Van Sleet.

Miss Waring and Mr. Burnham are to be married to-morrow at noon at New Forest, the country home of Mrs. Emma Fay, at Wood's Holl, Cape Cod. The Rev. Charles W. Harvey, pastor of the Church of New Jerusalem, Brookline, will officiate. Mr. and Mrs. Burnham will depart from Wood's Holl on the afternoon train and will arrive in Pittsfield at 10 o'clock. At the Hotel Wendell a wedding supper will be served, the bride and bridegroom and their aerial pilot dining together.

About midnight, the balloon, which will be provisioned and inflated for the trip during the evening, will be released from the park. It will be the intention of the honeymooners to make a long trip, and they do not care how long they have to stay up or where they will come down. The pilot will take upon himself all these details.

Mr. Burnham is well known both in Boston and New York as a prominent young artist. Miss Waring, the bride-to-be, is the daughter of the late Col. George Houston Waring of Savannah, Ga., who first introduced the famous Morgan horses in the South. Her mother was Miss Howard, highly connected in Boston and Cambridge. Mrs. Caroline Gillman, the author, whose husband built Radcliffe, was her grand aunt, and Marie White, first wife of James Russell Lowell, was also a member of the family.

EIGHT BRIDAL COUPLES MEET.

All Bound Westward and in the Same Pullman Car.

Special to The New York Times.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Col., June 18.—A new record was established to-day by the Colorado Midland Road, when a Pullman car was turned over to eight bridal couples, all westbound on their honeymoon. Most of them reached Colorado Springs yesterday, and ascended Pike's Peak or visited other points of scenic interest. They met without previous arrangment at the Midland Station. Nearly all were strangers to each other.

The couples were Mr. and Mrs. J. Fleming Van Rensselaer of New York City and Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Jacobs of Buffalo, N. Y., bound for Glenwood Springs, Col., and Salt Lake City respectively; Mr. and Mrs. Howard James of Atlanta, Ga.; Mr. and Mrs. Ernest F. Jackson of New Orleans, Mr. and Mrs. E. McKay of Oklahoma, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles D. Thomas of St. Louis, bound for Honolulu.

KILLED BY BALLOON'S FALL.

Czar's Court Chamberlain Dead, His Wife Dying—Two Others Hurt.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 18.—Court Chamberlain Palitzin was killed, his wife was fatally injured, and two other persons received severe injuries in a balloon accident here to-day. The balloon General Wannowski, belonging to the Army Department—the same in which four officers had a similar misfortune a year ago—ascended to-day from the military balloon park in charge of Capt. Korbe. In the basket with him were Court Chamberlain Palitzin and his wife and Count Rostofftseff, Director of the Private Chancellery of Empress Alexander. The gas bag had drifted across the city at an altitude of a little less than a mile, and when just above the outskirts Count Rostofftseff by mistake pulled the rip cord.

As the gas escaped from the envelope the balloon fell rapidly to the ground, the car falling in the garden of a country house. M. Palitzin was killed by the fall, and his wife suffered terrible injuries. Capt. Korbe escaped with a broken leg and Count Rostofftseff with severe contusions.

With the exception of Capt. Korbe, all the occupants of the car were inexperienced members of the newly formed Russian Aero Club.

AERONAUTS' NARROW ESCAPE.

Sudden Drop Puts Prof. Pickering and Others in Peril—Ballast Saves Them.

RUTLAND, Vt., June 18.—While the balloon Massachusetts crossed a 2,000-foot mountain soon after its start from this city to-day, the conditions were unfavorable for the success of its project of crossing the White Mountains. With Prof. William H. Pickering, the Harvard astronomer, and Jay B. Benton, a Boston editor, as passengers, Pilot William Van Sleet of Pittsfield, Mass., guided the balloon in its upward flight after it left the ground at 10:45 A. M. A high northwest wind carried the balloon rapidly to the southeastward.

The balloon landed at Gilmanton, six miles from Laconia, N. H., at 1 P. M.

The aeronauts had a narrow escape from being hurled against the side of a high hill about fifteen miles east of the Connecticut River, when the balloon struck an adverse current, and fell at the rate of 2,000 feet for a few minutes. Quick work by Pilot Van Sleet and the dropping of seven bags of ballast enabled the balloon to rise slowly again.

The rest of the voyage was without incident.

CODY FLIES TWO MILES.

American at Aldershot Appears to Have Good Control of Aeroplane.

LONDON, June 18.—Capt. F. S. Cody, the American aeroplanist, who is in charge of the British Army Balloon Corps, made a two-mile circular aeroplane flight at Aldershot this evening at a height varying from 25 to 40 feet.

He appeared to have good control of his machine, though its movements were very undulatory. According to Capt. Cody, this was due to the motive power being too low.

TO LIST OUR STOCKS FOR TARIFF FAVORS

France May Hold Out Financial Inducements to Americans to Avoid High Duties.

A COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Will Report What Changes in Law Are Necessary to Put Foreign Securities on Bourse.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, June 18.—I am in a position to state that the Minister of Finance this afternoon determined to appoint soon a commission to inquire into alterations of the law of abonnements, which would be necessary to clear the way for the admission of all foreign securities which it is desired to list on the Bourse. This action will be taken in consequence of the hitch in the efforts to list the shares of the United States Steel Corporation.

The commission will be made up of financiers and Government fiscal agents, and is expected to report in October. The conclusions submitted by it may later become the subject of legislation, but its first purpose is, I believe, to inform the Government of the possibility of using the promise of such legislation as a card in negotiations on the tariff soon to be begun with the United States.

France has so little with which to barter for favorable rates that it came as a happy thought that what the Steel syndicate was so eager for must have a negotiable value.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 18.—If the listing of American securities on the Paris Bourse is to depend upon tariff concessions to France, in the opinion of tariff experts in Washington, the American stocks will not be listed. It was declared this evening that it would be impossible, under the provisions to be enacted in the new Tariff bill, to make such concessions to any country. They would vitiate the entire scheme of maximum and minimum tariff, which will depend for its effectiveness upon its even applicability to all countries.

Unless the United States desired to go into a tariff war with all the other countries of Europe, it is said, it could not make concessions to France alone. To do so would immediately bring down upon us the maximum tariffs of the countries adversely affected, with the inevitable result of enforcing our own maximum tariffs in those cases. To grant the concessions, whatever they are, to France would involve, therefore, the granting of similar concessions to all the other countries in order to avoid a series of tariff wars.

Even if there were a disposition to grant tariff concessions to France, as a legitimate method of securing the listing of American stocks on the Paris Bourse, the price involved in granting the same or equivalent concessions to all the other countries is regarded as out of all proportion to the object to be gained. But the tendency here is to regard such listing as a matter of advantage to a limited circle, which would make the granting of the desired concessions a use of special legislation for a private end. Those members of Congress who could be reached on the subject to-night said such a plan was utterly impossible.

DRIVE BISHOP FROM TOWN.

Nebraskans Resent Attempt to Take Possession of a Church.

ULYSSES, Neb., June 18.—The Right Rev. Bishop Bonacum of the Catholic Diocese of Lincoln, Father O'Brien of Seward, and Father Kline of Brainard, to-night were driven from this village by an angry mob of some 200 persons.

The Bishop and his priests had come to Ulysses to take possession of a church over which Father Murphy has had charge. Friends of Father Murphy, both Catholics and others, joined the mob and would have done violence to the Bishop and the priests had it not been for the strenuous efforts of Father Murphy, who counseled the mob to do no violence and requested that the vistors be let alone. So threatening, however, was the aspect, that Father O'Brien got a livery rig, and with Bishop Bonacum and Father Kline left in the direction of David City.

This rig was followed by an automobile full of church enemies of the Bishop. The rig was overtaken three miles from town, and the Bishop and the priests were forced to get out and walk, while the liveryman was made to drive back to Ulysses without his fare.

When last seen the Bishop and the priests were walking along the road toward David City. They were not harmed, but threats were made to "Egg them," "Mob them," and to treat them to various indignities.

FORT HAMILTON SAVED.

The Gallant 13th with Searchlight and by Gun Beat Off Invaders.

The Thirteenth Regiment, N. Y. N. G., Col. Charles O. Davis commanding, saved Fort Hamilton from capture last night, preventing the invasion of the borough's sacred soil by a hostile force.

The practice manoeuvre last night, one of several which have been conducted on and near the harbor waters for the last week, consisted of an attack on Fort Hamilton by four Government tugs representing battleships and cruisers—the Schofield, the Harvey Brown, the Frank, and the Hancock taking part in the engagement.

Col. Davis's men in the fort, keeping a sharp lookout for the enemy, flashed their searchlights on the attacking party about 8:30 o'clock, an instant later swinging their big guns to bear upon them. The ships were sunk, the battle won, and victory perched upon the flag of the gallant Thirteenth.

The success of the Brooklyn boys was so complete that the encampment will come to an end this morning, the soldiers returning to the inglorious paths of peace.

OFFERS TO BUILD VAST SUBWAY SYSTEM

Bradley-Gaffney-Steers Plan to Spend $101,000,000, City Putting Up Only $26,000,000.

NEW LINE BRONX TO THE BAY

Propcsal Gives a Ride from Van Cortlandt Park to Bay Ridge for a Nickel, with Transfers to Brooklyn Lines.

The Public Service Commission received yesterday from the Bradley-Gaffney-Steers Company a definite offer to build and operate subways, concerning which the big contracting combination wrote to the Public Service Commission some months ago. The plan thus submitted is the most extensive that has ever been proposed. It is made to conform to the provisions of the Rapid Transit act as amended this year, with the profit-sharing and indeterminate franchise features provided for. The new system, in addition, contemplates a 5-cent fare throughout its entire length, and transfers at all its intersections.

This means, according to the terms of the bid which was made yesterday, a ride from Van Cortlandt Park, or Pelham Village, to Fortieth Street in Bay Ridge for a nickel, with transfers so that the traveler may enter Brooklyn by either the Manhattan or the Williamsburg Bridge and find his way as far as Flatbush Avenue on the route of the Fourth Avenue Subway, either directly from the Manhattan Bridge or around through Williamsburg, over the Broadway (Brooklyn) Lafayette Avenue line. The new company proposes to do all of its work within three years if its bid is accepted.

Details of the Proposal.

The offer is made up of eight sections, which, when they are taken together, outline the construction of the Broadway-Lexington Avenue route from the Battery to the Harlem River, with the Bronx extensions, as already laid out by the Public Service Commission; the operation of the loop connecting the Brooklyn and Williamsburg Bridges which the city is building; the construction of a short link through Canal Street connecting the Broadway-Lexington Avenue route with the bridge loop; the operation of the Fourth Avenue route over the Manhattan Bridge from Canal Street, Manhattan, to Ashland Place, in Brooklyn, for which the city has already let contracts; the construction of the Broadway-Lafayette Avenue, Brooklyn, route connecting the Williamsburg Bridge with Atlantic Avenue by way of the two thoroughfares named. In respect to the last section of the Fourth Avenue, Brooklyn, route from Ashland Place to Fortieth Street, Bay Ridge, the bidders are willing either to construct, equip, and operate, or to equip and operate in case the city desires to construct. In all instances where construction is proposed, the Bradley-Gaffney-Steers Company will undertake both the equipment and operation.

The members of the Public Service Commission were highly gratified at receiving the offer of the Bradley-Gaffney-Steers Company. While no statement was made on behalf of the commission for publication, it is understood that the commission considers the offer as the best evidence that the provisions incorporated into the Rapid Transit act by the amendments which the commission proposed at the last session are such that private capital will be willing to bid for the construction of truly comprehensive subway systems under the act as it stands to-day. Furthermore, it was learned that the commission is reliably informed that the Bradley-Gaffney-Steers combination has ample capital behind it, and, in fact, is even better equipped in this respect than John B. McDonald was when he bid upon the construction of the present Subway.

No figures as to cost are included in the offer to the Public Service Commission, but according to the commission's own estimates for the routes which are covered by the Bradley-Gaffney-Steers bid, a total expenditure for construction of about $101,000,000 is involved. Of this, approximately $75,000,000 would be spent by the bidders upon the Broadway-Lexington Avenue line, the Canal Street line, and the Broadway-Lafayette Avenue (Brooklyn) line. The city's investment would be represented by the ten-million-dollar bridge loop line, the Flatbush Avenue-Fourth Avenue line, for which contracts have already been let, and the proposed extension from Ashland Place, the terminus of the Fourth Avenue line as now contracted for, to Fortieth Street, Bay Ridge. The contracts for the line to Flatbush Avenue called for the expenditure of $4,600,000, while those for the extension to Fortieth Street involved an outlay of $11,400,000, according to plans of the Public Service Commission.

Text of the Contractors' Offer.

This is the letter of the Bradley-Gaffney-Steers Company to the Public Service Commission:

Bradley-Gaffney-Steers Co., Contractors,
1 Madison Avenue, New York.
June 17, 1909.

To the Hon. William R. Willcox, Chairman Public Service Commission for the first District.

Dear Sir: Replying to your favor of May 26, 1909, we beg to submit to your honorable commission the following proposition relating to the construction, maintenance, and operation of a system of subways, under the provisions of the Rapid Transit act, as now amended, as a substitute for our proposition heretofore submitted to you under date of March 18, 1909.

We submit herewith a map showing the proposed routes, and we briefly describe the same, as follows:

Section A, extending from the Battery, through Church and Vesey Streets, with double tracks, to Broadway; thence, with a four-track, double-deck system, northerly along Broadway to Tenth Street; thence through private property to Irving Place; thence northerly, along Lexington Avenue, under the Harlem River, to Mott Avenue and its juncture with 149th Street, following substantially the line, plans, and specifications of the Broadway-Lexington Avenue subway, as laid out by the commission.

Section B, two tracks in the existing Subway known as the Subway Loop, now nearing completion, and across the Manhattan and Williamsburg Bridges, with necessary connections, and a terminal in City Hall Park.

Section C, a two-track subway connecting Sections A and B, along Canal Street.

Section D, two tracks in a subway from the eastern terminal of the Manhattan Bridge, along Flatbush Avenue extension and Fulton Street, to Ashland Street (Place) in the Borough of Brooklyn, this being a portion of the route laid out by Supposed to be Midhat's, Brought from Arabia for Late Sultan to See.

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 18. — The commander of the gendarmerie of Beshikmash, in the rear of the Yildiz Palace here, reports that he has found in a cellar where the former Sultan's victims were imprisoned a box containing a skull supposed to have been that of Midhat Pasha.

Midhat's head was brought to Constantinople by Abdul Hamid's order to prove the he was really dead. He was Grand Vizier in 1872 and again in 1876-7. He was born in Bulgaria and died in Arabia in 1884.

GARFIELD TURNS AUTHOR.

Ex-Secretary to Tell Things About the Roosevelt Administration.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, June 18.—James R. Garfield, ex-Secretary of the Interior, has turned author. He is at his home at Mentor grinding out "copy" for a book which will reveal some of the inner workings of the Roosevelt Administration.

It is said that he will tell some of the secrets of the famous tennis cabinet meetings, and also something about tennis as played by the man who recently kept things humming around the White House.

DIPPEL GETS LOIE FULLER

To Dance at Metropolitan with Fifty Pupils—Also to Engage Ballet.

PARIS, June 18.—Loie Fuller, the dancer, has signed a contract for the appearance of herself and fifty of her pupils at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. The contract is practically a duplicate of that signed with the Boston Opera.

In addition Andreas Dippel, Assistant Director of the Metropolitan Opera House, has commissioned Miss Fuller to engage a new ballet for him.

REFUSE TO ASK ROCKEFELLER.

Nebraska Governor and Chancellor Could Have Obtained $50,000 Gift.

OMAHA, Neb., June 18.—None of John D. Rockefeller's money will go for improvements on the athletic field of the University of Nebraska; that is the decision of Gov. Shallenberger and Chancellor Avery.

For some time the Athletic Board of the University and the students have been circulating a petition to be presented to the Governor and the Chancellor for their signatures. They were informed that if they signed $50,000 was assured, but both refused to affix their names, saying that the offices they occupied would not permit of them going on record as asking for the gift. Their refusal has caused the matter to be dropped.

CARNEGIE'S NEW PEACE PLAN.

Now Wants England to Invite Conference for Lesser Armaments.

LONDON, June 19.—Andrew Carnegie in a long letter to The Times deplores the tendency of the European Powers to increase naval armaments. He finds that "unfounded suspicion" is the root of all the toruble, and that Great Britain is especially blamed on the Continent for the serious consequences following her introduction of the Ddeadnought type of ship.

He now thinks that not America, but Great Britain, ought to invite a conference of the powers to secure an arrest of the ruinous competition in armaments.

GRAFT LAMB'S BONE INTO MAN.

Operation to Save from Amputation a Leg with Compound Fracture.

Docearl Townsend, an elevator operator, was taken to the hospital several days ago suffering from a compound fracture of the leg. The operation was decided upon rather than amputation.

Chicago surgeons say this is the first time the operation has been attempted in America.

BEAR ALMOST GOT WARBURTON

Broke Away from Trap After New York Man on His Honeymoon Shot It.

Special to The New York Times.

KATAHDIN, Me., June 18.—G. Robert Warburton of New York, who is spending a honeymoon in the woods, narrowly escaped death in an encounter with a wounded black bear near Berry's Camp, at Yoke Pond, recently.

Mr. Warburton found a big bear which had partly freed itself from a steel trap by gnawing off all but a shred of its paw. Creeping within ten yards of the beast, the hunter fired a shot from his rifle. The brute with a powerful wrench liberated his foot and made for the hunter. Mr. Warburton did not have another cartridge in the chamber of his rifle, and he raised the gun as a club. Within two yards of him, however, the bear fell dead, the shot having pierced its throat.

FIND MISS SIGEL DEAD IN TRUNK

WAS STRANGLED TO DEATH

ROPE AROUND HER NECK

Two Chinamen Whom as a Missionary She Had Helped Sought by Police —Three Arrests on Suspicion.

A body which at 1:24 o'clock this morning was identified as that of Miss Elsie Sigel, daughter of Paul Sigel of 209 Wadsworth Avenue, Washington Heights, son of Gen. Franz Sigel of civil war fame, was found yesterday afternoon in a trunk on the top floor of 782 Eighth Avenue, in apartments occupied by Chinamen. She had been strangled with a rope, which was found tightly wound around her neck.

The identification, according to Capt. Carey of Police Headquarters, was made by Mrs. Sigel, the murdered girl's mother. She made the identification by means of jewelry found on the dead girl.

Miss Sigel was 22 years old and had been a missionary worker on the east side. The police say she was lured to the home of the Chinamen.

The occupants of the room in which the body was discovered, Lung Lin, who also goes by the name of William L. Leon, and a companion, Chung Sin, who occupied a room adjoining, are both missing, and Central Office detectives are looking for them.

The police arrested during the night Yee Kim, a Chinaman, employed as manager of the Eighth Avenue chop-suey restaurant; Dong Wing of 10 Pell Street, who sauntered into the place where the murder was committed and began asking questions, and Chin Sung, who lives in the place. Word was wired to the police of all the cities to arrest the two missing Chinamen on sight on charge of murder.

Lung Lin, who was a waiter in a chop-suey restaurant run by his cousin, Sun Leung, on the second floor of the same building, is known to have been acquainted with Miss Sigel. Sigel called at Police Headquarters last night, after word had been conveyed to him of the finding of the murdered girl's body, and said that his daughter had been missing from home since June 9. Miss Sigel was a missionary. Sigel was aware that she had been doing work among Chinamen of the lower east side.

Sigel went to the scene of the murder, and a gold-plated shell bangle which the murdered girl had worn about her neck was shown to him. It had engraved upon it the initials "P. C. S." Sigel declared, immediately upon seeing the bangle, that he did not believe his daughter had ever worn it.

Sigel viewed the body, which was in a bad condition, but could not distinguish the features. The police, not satisfied that the victim of the crime was not Sigel's daughter, sent detectives at midnight to the Sigels' home with the bangle, to see if her mother could identify it.

Earlier in the evening a detective had been informed by Mrs. Sigel that in her daughter's room was a photograph of Lung Lin, in whose room the body was found. Mrs. Sigel knew of her daughter's work in Chinatown, but had never heard her daughter speak of Lung Lin. She received a telegram from her daughter dated on June 12, a week ago today, from Washington, saying that the daughter would return to New York the next day.

Strange Telegram from Daughter.

"Don't worry," the telegram read. Mrs. Sigel heard nothing from her daughter after that.

The murdered girl's body was discovered by detectives from the West Forty-seevnth Street Police Station. Sun Leung, the restaurant proprietor, who has a room in the front of the fourth floor of the building, had been wondering what had become of his cousin, Lung Lin, and the latter's friend, Chung Sin, who was a cook in the restaurant. The two Chinamen disappeared from the restaurant on Sunday. Leung had knocked at the doors of their adjoining rooms each morning after they first failed to appear for work, but had received no answer. Yesterday afternoon about 4:45 o'clock the restaurant proprietor, going past Lin's room, detected a strong odor.

Leung thought something must be wrong, so he went out to look for a policeman. On the street he met a customer of the restaurant and together they went to the West Forty-seventh Street Station. As soon as Capt. Post heard what the Chinaman had to say he sent Detectives Christopher Fitzgerald and John Riordan around to the house. They took with them a locksmith.

It took only a short time to get the door of Lin's room open. Alongside the bed the detectives found a large, rusty trunk, which was bound around with rope such as is used on awnings. It was tied twice around the front of the trunk and another band went around the trunk lengthwise. There were at least fifteen knots in the rope. The detectives cut the rope and this released the cover of the trunk, which flew open, revealing the body of the victim.

Rope Around the Victim's Neck.

The body had been forced down into the trunk until the head rested upon the bottom, and the arms and legs were tied down. The detectives lifted the body from the trunk and found another part of the awning rope tied around the neck. It was tied so firmly that the flesh had been cut

The body was minus all the clothing excepting a shirtwaist and the undercloth-ing.

Coroner Julius Harburger was called, and expressed the opinion that the girl had been dead at least six days, possibly a few days longer. The police started at once to search the rooms in an effort to obtain some clues. They found the door leading from Lin's room to that of Sin locked. It appeared, from the general arrangement of the rooms, that the two men had occupied them jointly, Sin's room, which is the largest and extends clear across the rear of the fourth floor, being used by both men as a kitchen.

Chinaman in a Love Affair.

From cards the police concluded that Lin, under the name of William L. Leon, had been involved in some sort of a love affair. They found this note, written in a man's handwriting: "I hope you do not get mad with me because all the trouble starts from me. We hope some day the happiness comes to us both."

It appeared as though this note had never been sent. There was another note which bore the name of "Elsie," and Capt. Carey of Police Headquarters, who took personal supervision of the investi-gation of the murder, told a TIMES report-er that this young woman seemed to have figured in the life of Lin. There was nothing to indicate "Elsie's" last name.

The first indication that Leon—or Lin—was acquainted with Miss Sigel, the mis-sionary, was when the detectives went upon a line of investigation after finding a letter signed by Henry G. Burnell, a guest of the Hotel Bristol at 122 West Forty-ninth Street. This letter read:

William L. Leon: Your note received. Thanking you for the same, but I cannot go to dinner Friday evening, as I have an en-gagement with some friends. Will be pleased to go any day next week if agreeable to you, except Tuesday night. Yours truly,
HENRY G. BURNELL.

The detectives hurried around to the Bristol and found Burnell, who told them he had known Lin under the name of Leon for several months. He said that he met Lin in a Chinese restaurant in Sixth Avenue, near Twenty-eighth Street. Bur-nell said: "Lin told me some time ago that he knew a Miss Sigel, who was a missionary in Chinatown. He told me she was a very fine young woman deeply in-terested in converting Chinamen. He said that he had gone over with her to Chinatown and had tried to make her work there easier for her. I myself have been interested in this sort of mission-ary work, and in the course of this I learned to know Lin fairly well.

"He was a very sincere young fellow and appeared to me to be most religious. He told me that he had accepted Chris-tianity. He was 30 years old I should say. I received a note from him asking me to go out to dinner a week ago Fri-day. It was to be a small affair. After sending my note to him I did not see Lin again."

After this interview the police communi-cated with a rescue mission on Mott Street and learned that the Miss Sigel of whom Burnell spoke was the daughter of Paul Sigel. They then communicated with Sigel, and he hurried to Police Head-quarters.

On the dresser in Lin's room was also found a newspaper of the date of May 18, in which was marked in red ink an arti-cle telling of the antics of a Chinaman named Yung Bing of 18 Pell Street, who, on the day before, had rushed into St. Patrick's Cathedral crying out that he was the Son of God.

He raved like a madman, according to the story, and the priests caused his ar-rest. There was on top of this news-paper a summons issued by the First Dis-trict Court, demanding Bing's appearance there on May 26, at the instance of Wil-liam L. Leon.

An Oriental Apartment.

In the room of Chung Sin the police found all manner of Oriental decorations. The coverlet on the bed had worked upon it a dragon in fiery red. Hanging on the wall over the bed was a picture of a Chinaman and a chromo representation of a Chinese god. There were all sorts of Chinese pamphlets on two tables in the room. In a wire frame that hung on one wall were a score of photographs of Chinamen and white women.

In a drawer of the dresser was a silver bracelet and half a dozen Chinese taels, on which were engraved the initials E. L. S. There was a geography on the fly leaf of which was written in a crude scrawl: "New line to Boston 220, Har-vard University." There were several Bibles, both in English and Chinese, on the dresser as well as some books on first lessons in English.

After lifting the body from the trunk and placing it upon the floor in the rear room the police found in the bottom of the trunk a card with the inscription, "The High Rollers." The police made a thorough search of the two rooms trying to find the missing articles of attire of the murdered girl. Tucked away on a shelf in Sin's room was a blue Eton jacket. The police could not find the girl's stockings, shoes, or skirts. They girl's stockings, shoes, or skirts. They rope such as that that had been used in strangling the victim and in tying up the trunk.

The best description the police could give of the murdered girl was that she was five feet in height, about 22 years old, with dark hair.

The murdered girl's shirtwaist was of plain white.

Sun Leung was taken to the West Forty-seventh Street Station, but after being questioned he stepped out and disap-peared. The police are looking for him.

The police searched Leung's room and found in it a hat that had apparently be-longed to a very young girl. This was later shown to Mr. Sigel, but he said that it was not his daughter's. It was evident-ly worn by a girl not over 10 or 12 years of age. It was a sailor hat. The police detained Leung at the station all night.

It was after 8:30 P. M. that Mr. Sigel reached Police Headquarters. He was much disturbed, but did not hesitate to go with Detective Griffin to the sinister looking apartments of the Chinaman up on the dingy top floor of the Eighth Avenue scene of the murder.

All Mr. Sigel would say after the gold-plated bangle was shown him was: "I am quite sure that this never belonged to my daughter. It looks to me more like one used by some one belonging to a school. I imagine that the initials indicate this. My daughter has not attended school for some years. I cannot say that the cloth-ing on this young woman's body was that of my daughter, though I am very sure it was not hers.

No Word from Her After June 10.

"I have no idea where my daughter could have gone after she left home on June 10, but inasmuch as we received a telegram from Washington, it must be that she went there on missionary work. Why she did not communicate with us after her telegram, which said she would be home last Sunday, I cannot under-stand."

The police figured that if the victim of the murder was by any chance Miss Sigel, there would have been plenty of time for her to have returned from Wash-ington and to have gone to the home of the Chinamen on Sunday, upon which day Coroner Harburger thinks the crime was committed. The police seem certain that if Miss Sigel went to the Chinamen's home it was in pursuit of her work as a missionary.

Capt. Carey told a TIMES reporter late last night that he had found a plain empty envelope in the dresser drawer in the room in which the body was found, addressed to "Miss Elizabeth Sigel, 209 Wadsworth Avenue, New York City."

Capt. Carey said that he had come across several love letters written by some one who signed herself "Elsie," but he would not make them public.

At the Sigel home, in Wadsworth Ave-nue, a reporter was met at the door by a young man who said he was Miss Sigel's brother. He is about 19 years old.

According to the brother, Miss Sigel left home a week ago Wednesday. He said she started for Washington when she left home. Asked if Mrs. Sigel, his mother, was at home, the boy said she was not; that she was in "the hospital," but when a woman past middle age, attired in black, came downstairs, almost directly behind the lad, he turned and said quickly:

"Why, here's mother now."

Mrs. Sigel Is Silent.

Mrs. Sigel refused to open her lips, and stood listening in silence to the son speaking with the reporter.

"You received a telegram from Miss Sigel in Washington?" the reporter asked.

"Yes," she wired, 'I have arrived safely,'" said young Sigel.

Asked if he knew a Chinaman who an-swered the description of Lung Lin, the Sigel boy said he did; that the Chinaman used to keep a restaurant at Fort George, and the Sigel family, like others in the neighborhood, had gone there for a Chi-nese dinner occasionally. The young man said his mother several years ago was interested in mission work in Chinatown, and that recently his sister, Elsie, was interested in that work.

Central Office men visited the Sigel home again and again during the night. Finally, after the mother and Reginald, the son, had been left alone, she was heard to exclaim:

"My God, Elsie!"

Then she swooned. It was some time before she recovered consciousness.

For the first time the police brought into use their Bertillon photographic ap-paratus to take pictures of the scene of the crime and of the victim. They used flashlights to take the pictures, and the puffs of powder from these flashes curled into the street where a tremendous throng crowded all through the night, attracted by the gruesome crime. At times the crowds were so great that the police had to establish lines to hold them back and permit the street cars to run through.

HUSBAND SHOOTS HIS BRIDE.

Then Kills Himself as His Father Begs Him to Pause.

Two pistol shots were fired in the flat house at 624 President Street, Brooklyn, at 10 o'clock last night. Hearing them, Richard J. Defley ran to the flat above, where lived his son, Richard J., Jr., and his bride, Margaret, to whom he was married last October.

On the floor of the kitchen, unconscious, with a bullet wound through her body, lay Mrs. Defley, hugging her two-months-old babe in her arms. Over her stood her husband.

"For heaven's sake, don't shoot again," cried the elder Defley as his son turned the revolver he held toward him-self.

Young Defley did not reply, but pulled the trigger. As the bullet entered his heart he fell to the floor dead.

His father called in the neighbors and got Dr. Bell from the Seney Hospital. The surgeon examined Mrs. Defley's wound and, saying that there was little hope for her recovery, hurried her to the hospital. Her condition steadily became worse last night.

The elder Defley said last night that domestic trouble had undoubtedly occa-sioned the shooting.

the commission, known as the Fourth Ave-nue Subway.

Section E, a two-track subway along Ful-ton Street, from Ashland Street to Lafa-yette Avenue; thence northerly along La-fayette Avenue to Reid Street (Avenue;) thence northerly along Reid Street (Ave-nue) to Broadway, (Williamsburg;) thence westerly along Broadway to the Williams-burg Bridge.

Section F, a two-track subway or ele-vated railroad northerly along Jerome Ave-nue, substantially as established by the commission in its proposed Broadway-Lex-ington Avenue route.

Section G, a two-track subway or ele-vated railroad easterly from Mott Avenue, in the Borough of the Bronx, along 138th Street and northeasterly, substantially as established by the commission in its pro-posed Broadway-Lexington Avenue route.

Section H, the Fourth Avenue subway from the intersection of Ashland Place and Fulton Street southerly, in the Borough of Brooklyn, as laid out by the commission.

We, or a corporation to be organized by us in accordance with the provisions of the railroad law and the requirements of the Rapid Transit act, will construct, for the City of New York, Sections A, C, E, F, and G above outlined. As a part of the same contract we desire the city to con-struct Sections B and D above outlined, Section B being already practically com-pleted and Section D being substantially the first section of the Fourth Avenue subway, for which contracts have already been let.

We will equip, maintain, and operate Sec-tions A, B, C, D, E, F, and G as one sys-tem, charging a five-cent fare and issuing transfers at intersecting points.

The title to the said railway shall be in the City of New York, but the possession thereof and the right to operate the same shall remain with us during such period of amortization as may be agreed upon, or until such time as the city may take over the plant and equipment, as provided in Sections 22, 27, and 28 of the Rapid Transit act.

The proceeds derived from the operation of such railroad, after deducting operating ex-penses, including maintenance of plant and equipment, payments to reserve and amorti-zation funds, as provided in the grant, an equitable charge for the use of Sections B and D, and after payment of interest at the rate of 5 per cent. upon the actual cost of construction of Sections A, C, E, F, and G, and of the equipment of said road, shall be divided, share and share alike, between us or our successors and the city, our rights in and to the railroad, unless sooner taken by the city, as above provided, to cease and determine at the end of the amortization period, without compensation.

The proposed grant shall contain a pro-vision that in case the city shall elect, in accordance with Sections 22, 27, and 28 of the rapid transit act, to take over the said road after a period of ten years, and, in any event, at the termination of the period of amortization, it shall also take over the equipment of the same, paying therefor actual cost and 15 per cent. in addition thereto.

We believe we can complete Section E, and have trains in operation over Sections B, C, D, and E, (known as the Lafayette, Broadway, and Bridge loops,) within eight-een months, provided the city completes Sections B and D within that time. Sec-tion A should be completed within three years, and Sections F and G within one year thereafter.

In case the city constructs Section H, in accordance with the contracts already let, we are willing to enter into a contract for the equipment and operation of the same, in connection with the other sections above outlined upon a car mileage basis or such other equitable plan as may be devised.

In view of the city's beneficial interest in the proposed system and its operation we suggest that some provision be made where-by the city shall be represented in the management of the operating company by the Mayor, Controller, and the Chairman of your commission, or other persons of their appointment.

We will give such bond as is required by the statute, and furnish further guarantees as may be required by the commission for the faithful performance on our part of the terms and conditions of the grant.

We believe that the foregoing plan will furnish the city a comprehensive system of rapid transit, and enable it to receive one-half the profits resulting from the use of this public franchise, and ultimately to become the absolute owner of this system of rapid transit without cost and without venturing either the city's money or credit.

If this meets with your approval, our engineers and attorneys will take up with your commission the details of a formal contract at your convenience. Very truly yours,
THE BRADLEY-GAFFNEY-STEERS COM-PANY.

Ready to Begin Work at Once.

Arthur J. Baldwin, law partner of ex-Attorney General John W. Griggs and counsel for the Bradley-Gaffney-Steers Company, said yesterday that his clients were ready to go ahead just as soon as the Public Service Commission and the Board of Estimate would let them. Mr. Baldwin said that the identity of the financial interests behind the bidders would not be announced until the con-struction company was formed, which would be in the near future. He was con-fident that the engineering facilities at the command of his clients would be ade-quate to complete the work within the time specified in yesterday's proposal.

Mr. Baldwin said that the plans were practically ready for all sections except the two Bronx extensions, and that these would be ready in a short time.

The procedure likely to be followed is for the commission to prepare contracts in accordance with the terms of the bids of the Bradley-Gaffney-Steers Company in so far as the commission may approve them, which contracts will then be sub-mitted to the Board of Estimate for its approval. When they are finally ap-proved by both bodies they will be adver-tised and the bids made in final form by the Bradley-Gaffney-Steers Company.

REJECT 'THE BRIDAL MORNING'

Pittsburg Art Committee Decides Not to Buy Disputed Picture.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., June 18.—Pitts-burgers opposed to the nude in art have won another victory. "The Bridal Morning" will not be hung on the walls of the Carnegie art gallery permanently, but will be shipped back to its owner, George Sauter of London, at the end of this month.

The decision of the Art Committee to turn back the picture which so incensed Pittsburg was made known to-day, when it was announced that four more pictures had been purchased for the permanent collection, and the list given did not in-clude "The Bridal Morning." It was also admitted that no more pictures would be purchased. The pictures to-day bought are the "Portrait of Mrs. C.," by Will-iam M. Chase of New York; "November Hills," (third prize winner,) by Bruce Crane of New York; "Spring Morning," by Childe Hassam of New York, and "Munich Boy," by J. Frank Currier.

THINKING OF FARNUM, CALLED HIM 'DEARIE'

said, when Mrs. Gould had mistaken him for Farnum and addressed him as "dearie."

Went to Theatre After Farnum.

"She then sent me to Brooklyn to get two theatre tickets. At 10 o'clock that night I took her to Brooklyn, and about 11 o'clock Farnum got in the car and I drove them back to the hotel."

This was repeated on another evening. Flynn said. The only other men he had ever driven in Mrs. Gould's car were Mr. Sells and Douglas Robinson, he testified.

Mr. Shearn in cross-examination got from the witness that on the first day in Mrs. Gould's employ he drove her to a palmist's on Forty-second Street. He questioned Flynn minutely about the va-rious trips Farnum and Mrs. Gould made to Brooklyn together.

He caused some amusement by saying that on the morning he went to get Far-num from the Somerset Hotel the actor was standing on the steps of the hotel when he drove up. Just at that moment two of Farnum's friends came along and spoke admiringly of the machine.

"Yes, this is my new one," Flynn said the actor told them as he jumped in.

Q.—You have no grudge against Mrs. Gould? A.—Not at all; I am a married man myself.

The next witness was another personal friend of the Goulds. He was John H. Kimble, who is in the oil and paint busi-ness. He testified that in August, 1908, at the invitation of Mr. Sells, who is a cousin of Mrs. Gould's, he joined these two at a dinner at Sherry's, afterward occupying a stage box at the Academy of Music, where Farnum was appearing in "The Virginian."

Q.—Did you notice anything in Mrs. Gould's conduct when Farnum appeared on the stage? A.—Not then, but after the first act Mr. Farnum came in front of the cur-tain and there was recognition between him and Mrs. Gould. Mrs. Gould told me that he knew we were going to be present, and added smilingly, "He's my new beau."

Mr. Shearn merely obtained from the witness an admission that he had busi-ness relations with Mr. Gould.

Says She Met Farnum in Hartford.

A French chauffeur, Loen Leheroux, whose evidence had to be interpreted, told of Mrs. Gould's auto trip in company with the Misses Sells to Boston, Spring-field, and Hartford in September, 1906. He drove the car on that occasion. It was at the last stop, Hartford, that Far-num's name first appeared in his narra-tive. The second day of their stop in that city, the Frenchman said, Mrs. Gould instructed him to be at her hotel at 10 in the morning. He was there on time, but had to wait two hours before she ap-peared. She then ordered him to drive to another hotel, which she entered while he waited. After a time a man came out and told him to come back at 4 o'clock.

Q.—Had you ever seen this man before? A.—Yes.

Q.—Where? A.—Fourteenth Street, New York City, between Third Avenue and Broadway. I saw him when he was play-ing with cowboys. He is an actor.

Q.—Do you know his name? A.—Dustin Farnum.

Mr. Nicoll brought out that the occa-sion when Leheroux saw Farnum at Fourteenth Street was some months pre-viously, when he had driven Mrs. Gould to the Academy of Music, and, after the theatre was out, had taken them both in the car to the Twenty-third Street Ferry, where Mrs. Gould embarked on a train for Virginia, Farnum returning in the automobile to Fourteenth Street.

Getting back to the Hartford trip, the Frenchman said that he returned to the hotel soon after 4 o'clock that afternoon and took Mrs. Gould back to her hotel. The next morning they returned to New York.

Leheroux also told of a trip made by Farnum and Mrs. Gould to the Larchmont Yacht Club, and of a supper party after-ward at Martin's, at which, besides Far-num, Mr. Sells and the Misses Sells were present.

The stay made by Mrs. Gould, the Misses Sells, and Farnum at the Bellevue-Stratford in Philadelphia in October, 1906, was then taken up. The first witness called was Miss Mary Elizabeth Harrison, who at that time was a floor clerk in the hotel. Mrs. Gould occupied a suite of rooms on the sixth floor, while Farnum was on the fourteenth floor.

Miss Harrison, who is now employed at the Belmont Hotel in this city, which dis-closure caused Mrs. Gould, who is living there herself, much astonishment, ex-plained that on each floor of the hotel was a floor clerk. Part of the duties of this clerk was to keep notes of what went on on the floor, and for this purpose a com-bination of mirrors was arranged around her desk so that she could see the entire floor, even to seeing down the side pas-sages. It was impossible, she said, for any one to enter or leave a room on the floor without being seen by her.

Incident in Philadelphia Hotel.

Q.—Do you recollect Mrs. Gould and a party being at the Bellevue-Stratford in October, 1906. A.—Oh, my, yes.

Q.—What rooms did they occupy? A.—Nos. 616, 617, 618, on the sixth floor—a parlor and two bedrooms.

Miss Harrison said she was notified that Mrs. Gould's party was to occupy the apartments some time before they got there. A slip was given her, which read, "Mrs. Gould and party." It was the practice, she testified, to have the indi-vidual names of every one staying in the hotel, but on this occasion only Mrs. Gould's name was given.

"Mrs. Gould had two young ladies with her when she arrived. I saw the young ladies and a man leave the room one night," the witness testified.

Q.—Did you see drinks being served in the room? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you ever see a gentleman com-ing out of Mrs. Gould's room? A.—Yes. One morning about 7:30. He was tall, had bushy hair, wore a long storm coat with the collar turned up and a hat pulled down over his head. I watched him; he went to the elevator and rang the bell to go up. There was nobody else in the car. I watched the dial and noted that he got off at the fourteenth floor. I telephoned up to Miss Florence Garner, the floor clerk on that floor, and told her what I had seen, and then reported the occurrence to the office.

So far the name of Dustin Farnum had not been mentioned in connection with this incident, but Mr. Shearn, in his ex-amination of Miss Garner, the fourteenth floor clerk, brought out the fact that the man in question had been the actor. Al-though Mr. Shearn subjected Miss Harri-son to a long and tedious questioning, he was unable to shake her testimony.

Asked how she became a witness, Miss Harrison said that after much struggling with her conscience and tearing up sev-eral letters she finally wrote to Mr. Gould in August, 1908, telling him that she had "information which might prove valuable to him." She said that she had come to the conclusion that it was her "Christian duty" to do so, "in obedience to the Golden Rule."

In response to her letter, Miss Harrison said, Cornelius J. Sullivan of Mr. Gould's counsel went to Philadelphia and saw her at the Young Women's Christian Associa-tion there.

In corroboration of Miss Harrison's tes-timony, Miss Florence Garner, the other floor clerk, was put on the stand. She is at present employed at the Hotel Knick-erbocker, in this city. Examined by Mr. Nicoll, she said that one of her duties was to watch for the presence of the opposite sex going to rooms where they were not registered and report such oc-currence to the office. Asked to describe Farnum's appearance on the morning in question, she said:

Farnum's Out-All-Night Look.

"Mr. Farnum was never very well groomed when I saw him, and that morn-ing he looked more untidy than usual."

Q.—What do you mean? A.—He looked as if he had been out all night. He im-pressed me with his general untidiness as he walked to his room.

Miss Garner corroborated her colleague as to the telephonic messages which passed between them. Under cross-ex-amination the witness fixed the time that Farnum got off the elevator at shortly after 7:30 A. M., she having just returned from breakfast.

She said she instructed the floor maid to investigate as to whether Farnum had slept in his room or not. The maid, un-der pretext of asking Farnum whether he wanted towels, saw that the bed had not been occupied. Miss Garner said that on learning this she reported the matter at the hotel office.

The visit to the Marlborough-Blenheim, at Atlantic City, on the Sunday inter-vening during the stay at the Bellevue-Stratford was the next subject of atten-tion by Mr. Nicoll. It will be remembered that on this occasion Mrs. Gould, Farnum, the Misses Sells, and Miss May Robson, the actress, all motored down to Atlantic City and stayed over night. Mr. Nicoll called J. Fletcher Street of Philadelphia, the architect of the Marlborough-Blen-heim, to identify the floor plan of the seventh floor of the hotel, where the Gould party was accommodated. Mr. Street testified that the location and num-bers of the rooms in question were the same to-day as when the hotel was opened. The Gould party occupied Rooms 759 to 764.

Three Beds for Five Persons.

Miss Margaret Magee, a chambermaid who had charge of the suite at the time of the Gould visit, testified that one of the rooms was used as a sitting room, the remaining four being bedroms. She said that after the visitors had left the hotel next morning she inspected the rooms and found that the two beds in Room 763 had not been used. In Room 760, she said, there was a large double bed, while the other two rooms were fitted with twin beds.

This left three bedrooms to be occupied by the five members of the party. Mr. Nicoll contended that Miss Robson occu-pied one of these, the Misses Sells an-other, while Mrs. Gould slept in the third. The question he tried to solve was where Mr. Farnum slept.

Mr. Shearn in his cross-examination tried hard to get the witness to admit that Mrs. Gould engaged a suite of six rooms instead of five, with the idea of showing that Farnum occupied the sixth room.

The only other witness examined yes-terday was Harry J. Veitch, who was formerly Mrs. Gould's valet. He told of his mistress drinking at Castle Gould, at the St. Regis, and at the Blue Gap Farm, Va. He related an incident which oc-curred at the St. Regis, when, annoyed at a waiter's delay, he said Mrs. Gould or-dered him to throw a table, dishes, silver, and all into the corridor.

Veitch said he obeyed the order. While at the farm, the witness said that he per-sonally served to Mrs. Gould two quarts of Manhattan cocktails, in addition to which she drank wines and liquors at meals.

In an effort to finish the case by the conclusion of the June term, which ends next Friday, Justice Dowling sat last night until 7 o'clock, and intimated that unless considerable progress was made on Monday he would in all probability hold night sessions next week.

Mr. Nicoll would not commit himself as to whether he will put Howard Gould on the stand. In some quarters it is now considered unlikely that this will be done.

The court adjourned until Monday morning.

WRIGHTS STOP WORK TO RECEIVE MEDALS

GOV. HARMON PRAISES THEM

Tells Wrights Their Achievements Will Make Us Recast Our Habits, Laws, and Business Methods.

DAYTON, Ohio, June 18.—The Nation, the State, and the city in which they live to-day paid tribute to Wilbur and Orville Wright, the aviators. Standing on a platform not far from their unpretentious aeroplane factory, and almost within sight of a field where they first struggled with the problem of aerial navigation, Gen. James Allen, Chief Signal Officer of the army, assigned by Secretary of War Dickinson for the purpose, presented to the Wright brothers the gold medals authorized by act of Congress. At the same time they were presented with a diamond-studded medal bearing the official seal of the State of Ohio, and another from Dayton, their home city. The State medal was presented by Gov. Harmon of Ohio; the local medal by Mayor Edward E. Burkhart of Dayton.

Baron Kogoro Takahira, the Japanese Ambassador, and Carlos G. Velez, the Cuban Minister, were among those at the ceremony.

After the presentation ceremony the crowds witnessed a parade of floats depicting the development of locomotion in America. This was headed by an Indian runner, followed by the various stages from the ox cart to the automobile, ending with an aeroplane, with the suggestion that the next route for speeding would be among the clouds.

Although this, the second day of Dayton's home coming celebration, was crowded with events arranged in their honor, the Wrights found time to labor in their workshops preparing for departure to Washington, where they are to resume flights for the Government next week. As soon as the Government's requirements are fulfilled it is expected they will sail for Germany to take up work for the German Government.

Gen. Allen Presents Medals.

In presenting the Government medals to the Wright brothers Gen. Allen gave a history of the relation between the United States Government and the Wright brothers in the purchase of an aeroplane. He said that, so far as he knew, the contract entered into by the Wright brothers for furnishing the Government with a heavier-than-air flying machine was the first public contract ever made by any Government for aeronautical appliances of this kind.

He also spoke of the flights of the Wright brothers both in America and abroad, concluding his remarks along this line by saying that to them is due the great credit of first publicly demonstrating to the world the practicability of dynamic flight.

Gov. Harmon's Speech.

Gov. Harmon, in his speech, said in part:

"We hope and believe that by your studies, experiments, inventions, and appliances, you are opening to mankind the long-coveted thoroughfare which leads everywhere, and none can monopolize or obstruct. You will make us recast our habits, laws, and business methods, but we have had to do that so often that we are used to it. This will not detract from your renown or our gratitude."

Major Burkhart, in presenting to the Wright brothers the medals awarded them by the City of Dayton, said in part:

"Never before in the history of our Government has such an honor been bestowed on private citizens. Their scientific achievements have startled the world. Their invention has attracted the attention of all nations. With the perfect development of their aeroplane wars will be only an incident of past ages. Who knows to-day what the development of their invention may mean to future civilization?"

Wrights Thank the Donors.

In accepting the medals Wilbur Wright said:

"It is naturally with a feeling of pride that we accept these tokens, and I wish to thank the people of the United States, of Ohio, and of Dayton. It is sometimes said inventors usually do not receive the sympathy and encouragement which is their due. This cannot be said of us. Even in the infancy of our work we received offers of financial assistance from people who could have no hope of reward. The poets sometimes have occasion to complain of their lack of substantial sympathy, yet I have no doubt, that if $1,000,000 would bring another Shakespeare or a Tennyson, the money would be forthcoming in this country within five minutes. If poets and inventors do not get their dues, it is rather because the world is unaware of their needs than because of indifference."

Orville Wright said:

"I wish our work was commensurate with the honors that have been heaped upon us. Thank you."

The benediction was pronounced by Bishop Milton Wright, the venerable father of the aviators. Present also were Miss Katherine Wright, a sister, and other members of the Wright family.

WRIGHT AEROPLANE ARRIVES.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 18.—The Wright aeroplane arrived in Washington to-day and was transported to Fort Myer. It came detached, packed in eight boxes. Charles Taylor, the chief mechanician for the Wright brothers, immediately began to assemble it, and by evening he had it in fairly presentable shape. Before sundown to-morrow night he believes it will be practically ready for ahe final flights to comply with the Government's requirements.

It is not known definitely when Orville Wright will arrive, but Gen. James Allen, Chief Signal Officer, who is now in Dayton, hopes to bring the aviator back with him on Sunday night.

The aeroplane was examined with great interest by the signal officers. It was found to differ little from the machine in which Orville Wright made his spectacular flights last year. The guy wires near the propellers are arranged in a fashion that will preclude the possibility of them coming in contact with the whirling blades, and there is an improvement in the controlling device.

The ordeal set for Orville Wright is a difficult one. Following the trial flights, the aviator will have to make a direct flight over five miles of territory in a straight line, returning to the starting point and averaging not less than thirty-six miles an hour. The country around Fort Myer is rough and there are few places in which the aerial navigator could land, if anything went wrong with the machine.

It is probable Orville Wright will make a number of tests during the coming week to familiarize himself with the machine. He has not made a flight since the accident at the fort last year, which resulted in the death of Lieut. Selfridge.

Orville Wright will not attempt to make any new records. He will devote his entire energies to qualifying for the Government requirements, and if those are met the brothers will receive $25,000 for their machine, and the negotiations between them and the Government will have been brought practically to an end.

BLACK HAND LEADERS HELD.

Cincinnati Order Changed Its Name to Society of Brothers in Law.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, June 18.—Francisco Spadiro and Vincent Arrigo, arrested last night in a spectacular raid by Post Office Inspectors and police and held as leaders of the Cincinnati branch of the Society of the Banana, commonly known as the Black Hand, were arraigned before United States Commissioner Adler to-day and each released under $5,000 bail. The hearing is set for July 2.

The prisoners seem to have many friends among the Sicilians here and their two attorneys demanded an immediate hearing. Commissioner Adler refused. The attorneys threatened to seek habeas corpus writs, but finally agreed to postpone the hearing.

Evidence in the hands of Government officers show that a band of Sicilian Black Hand criminals has been meeting regularly in a room in the downtown business section. A few weeks ago the Ohio Black Hand held a meeting here and deposed an old "boss." The Cincinnati Black Hand at this meeting changed its name from "Society of the Banana" to "Society of the Brothers of Law."

The Government officers assert Spadiro was made the leader at this meeting, and that Salvatore Lima of Marion, Ohio, who was arrested last week, was elected Superintendent.

SNOW FLURRY UP STATE.

Disappeared as Fast as It Fell in Franklin County.

MALONE, N. Y., June 18.—A snow flurry in mid-June was the novel experience of the residents of Duane and other sections of Franklin County early to-day. The air was sharp and cool as some of the days in early April.

The snow continued to fall for only a short time, and it disappeared as fast as it fell.

NYACK, N. Y., June 18.—A severe windstorm struck Grand View, two miles below Nyack, early to-day, wrecking barns and sheds and uprooting many trees. A barn was blown down and strewn about the premises. Trees were uprooted, and an automobile belonging to John Ingram was wrecked.

CORONER REMANDS BERSIN SUSPECT

Harburger Sends Goldberg to the Tombs to Await an Inquest on Wednesday.

THE POLICE ARE SURPRISED

To the surprise of the police, who had spent Thursday night investigating his character, Sigmund Goldberg, who was detained in the Bersin murder case, was remanded by Magistrate Crane in the Tombs Police Court yesterday to the Coroner. After a brief examination he was committed to the Tombs without bail by Coroner Harburger to await the inquest next Wednesday. The Coroner, in committing Goldberg, announced that he would hold him on the testimony of 14-year-old Joseph Tortaro, who identified him as the man who left the bundles containing Bersin's dismembered body in his care. None of the other witnesses who alleged they had seen the man with the bundles identified Goldberg.

While being questioned by the Coroner, Goldberg nearly collapsed from fright. It was said that he understood very little English, and thought he was to be taken away and killed at once, a fear that was shared by Mrs. Goldberg, a frail, little woman, who was prostrated with grief and anxiety when she was told that her husband was to be locked up until Wednesday.

When asked by reporters in the Tombs Police Court yesterday morning before the case went before Magistrate Crane if he was sure that Sigmund Goldberg was the man who left the two bundles in his charge at Oliver and Henry Street, Tortaro said:

"I am not sure that he is," and then added: "I think he is."

Before the Coroner the boy said that he looked like the man, and when asked to look again he said that he was positive. Leonard A. Snitkin, the lawyer, who appeared on behalf of Goldberg, would not allow his client to make any statement yesterday.

The police admitted to the reporters that beyond the testimony of the boy they had not been able to get any evidence to connect Goldberg with the murder. Coroner Harburger had taken the matter out of their hands, they said, in committing the man to the Tombs to await an inquest. Inspector McCafferty said that he had received some information yesterday relative to the murder of Bersin, which he was not at liberty to divulge, and he expected to make an arrest within the next twenty-four hours.

The Inspector admitted that the uncertainty of Tortaro's identification of Goldberg as the man with the bundles, would weaken his further evidence in the case. He said the boy was no doubt anxious to get away from the custody of the Children's Society, and might have picked Goldberg out to get his release. The boy is a pupil in St. James's Parochial Schools and was to have graduated this month. He pleaded to have his books so that he could study in the rooms of the Society.

Friends of Goldberg, who live in the vicinity of 183 Allen Street, gave the man an excellent character yesterday, and said that they were willing to come into court and testify in his favor. According to his wife and the housekeeper in the house where they lived, Goldberg was eating his dinner at home on Thursday evening at the time the bundles containing Bersin's body were carried along Henry Street.

It was learned yesterday that Bersin had bought two watches in the last year from Samuel Schulman, a jeweler at 313 East 101st Street, a costly gold one and a silver one of good quality. The week before he met his death, Bersin was arranging to buy another one. His friends said that he had no faith in banks and invested his savings in jewelry.

In addition to the two diamond rings he wore, it was said yesterday that Bersin had purchased another ring from Isaac Levy three months ago, which was not seen by his friends. At the time he was killed the painter wore a cheap nickel watch. The detectives from the Central office are trying to trace back what became of the gold and silver watches Bersin bought from Schulman and the ring he got from Levy. The third watch he had arranged to buy was to cost $60, and it was evident that Bersin expected to get some money on Wednesday, as he told Schulman he would call and pay something down on the watch that night. He promised Morris Boriskin, his violin teacher of 57 East 102d Street, that he would pay some money he owed for lessons on Thursday night.

THREE HURT IN UPSET AUTO.

Car Speeding to Motor Races Runs Into a Ditch.

CROWN POINT, Ind., June 18.—Adolph Magnus, Florence Packard, and Harriet Barnes, all of Chicago, were injured early to-day by the overturning of their automobile, in which they were speeding to the motor car races. The car in the darkness ran into a ditch and turned over. The patients—none, it is said, seriously hurt—were brought to the military hospital at the grandstand.

Mr. Magnus and Miss Packard were the most seriously hurt. Miss Barnes was able to be about soon after reaching the hospital. Mr. Magnus is a stepson of Jacob W. Loeb, whose wife is a daughter of Adolphus Busch, the St. Louis brewer.

Charles Armstedd, said to be employed by a Chicago automobile agency, was seriously injured when his car overturned. Several ribs were fractured.

BANKER KILLED IN AUTO.

Joseph B. Breed Hurled Against a Tree —His Wife Injured.

LITTLETON, Mass., June 18.—Hurled against a tree when his automobile skidded and overturned at a sharp curve near the centre of this town to-day, Joseph B. Breed, a retired business man of Lynn, was killed. His wife was thrown to the ground and received fractures of one ankle and one wrist. The other occupants of the car, Mr. Breed's son-in-law, Henry Burrage, a Boston lawyer, and the chauffeur, escaped with only slight bruises.

Joseph B. Breed was a lifelong resident of Lynn. He was born in 1844, and for many years had been prominently identified with the city's business and financial interests. He was a Vice President of the Lynn Institution for Savings and a Director of the Central National Bank.

M. Robert Guggenheim Held for Exceeding the Speed Limit.

SEATTLE, June 18.—M. Robert Guggenheim, the donor of the trophy cup for the New York to Seattle automobile race, which is now in progress, was arrested by the police last night for exceeding the speed limit with his racing car. He was taken to Police Headquarters, where he deposited $50 bond for appearance in court.

He was asked to deposit only $25 bond, but could find nothing less than a $50 bill, and remarked that it might as well be $50, and put it up.

RUSSIAN SHOT HURT BRITON BUT LITTLE

Public in England Inclined to Overlook Firing on Woodburn as Due to "Nerves."

CZAR AND KAISER SEPARATE

Cordial Toasts Exchanged by Monarchs Before Hohenzollern Steams Off Toward Dantsic—Czar Stays On.

STOCKHOLM, June 18.—Coyne, the fireman on board the British steamer Woodburn of Newcastle, which was fired upon in Pitkipas Bay Wednesday night by a vessel of the Russian squadron patroling the rendezvous of the Czar and Kaiser, sustained only slight injuries and will probably be able to leave the hospital in a few days. He declares that three other members of the crew sustained slight injuries from the Russian fire.

Further details of the occurrence seem to indicate that the Woodburn strayed during the night within the prohibited zone of navigation in the vicinity of Pitkipas Bay. Her Captain was evidently unfamiliar with the published regulations. The Russian torpedo boat fired first three blank shots, which were followed up by four projectiles.

According to one version of the occurrence, however, the Woodburn was being escorted by a torpedo boat and had a Rusian Government pilot on board when she was fired upon.

REVAL, June 18.—The toasts exchanged between the Czar and the Kaiser at the banquet on board the Russian imperial yacht Standart last night were cordial in their expression for good relations between the two countries. "I assure your Majesty," said the Russian Emperor, "that I cherish the sincere and unchanging wish ever to maintain the traditional relations of hearty friendship and mutual trust that always have united our two houses, and the cultivation of which I strongly desire, not merely as a pledge of the good relations of our two countries, but of the general peace."

In reply the Kaiser said: "I am rejoiced to see, in this hearty reception, a new and valuable confirmation of our sincere personal friendship. I see in it also fresh confirmation of the traditional relationship of cordial friendship and confidence, which, corresponding to the manifold interests and thoroughly peaceful sentiments of our two countries, exists between our Governments."

The German imperial yacht Hohenzollern with the Kaiser on board steamed away in the direction of Dantsic this afternoon. She was escorted by a cruiser and exchanged the customary salutes with the Russian squadron as she left Pitkipas Bay.

The Czar had luncheon with the Kaiser on board the Hohenzollern at noon. No formal toasts were proposed, but the farewells between the two rulers were of the heartiest nature. The weather during the visit has been ideal for a meeting at sea. Premier Stolypin, Foreign Minister Isvolsky, and the German Ambassador to Russia, Count von Pourtales, returned to St. Petersburg this afternoon. The Czar will remain at Pitkipas.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 18.—The British Embassy here has received a report concerning the firing upon the British steamer Woodburn Wednesday night by a vessel of the Russian squadron which was patrolling the vicinity of Pitkipas Bay, where the Czar and the Kaiser were to meet the following day. The report came from the British Vice Consul at Viburg, whom the embassy had asked for an explanation of the incident. Its contents have not been made public.

The belief that any grave developments would follow the affair have been excluded, however, as it evidently was the result of some one's blunder, and for which either or both sides are willing to express regrets. No official statement of the facts surrounding the case has yet been given out, but while private dispatches from Viborg assert that the Woodburn was steering in accordance with directions given to her by a convoying torpedo boat, naval officers of the squadron declare the steamer was heading directly for the Standart, and that they could not afford to run the risk of having the imperial yacht run down.

LONDON, June 18.—The firing on the British steamer Woodburn by a Russian torpedo boat in Pitkipas Bay has not yet been reported to the Foreign Office, and the owners of the vessel are awaiting her return in order to secure full details, when they will ask for a complete investigation of the circumstances.

Officials are inclined to believe that the action of the Rusian vessel was due to some mistake which can be easily explained, and that the matter will be settled by the payment of compensation. The press and the public look upon it in the same light, and the incident, which a few years ago would have caused an outburst against Russia, is being generally minimized and put down to "accident or nerves."

BERLIN, June 18.—The Wolff Bureau, the official German news gathering agency, has received a wireless dispatch from its representative accompanying the Kaiser giving an interview he had with an official personage, evidently Foreign Secretary Von Schoen, or the GerGman Secretary Von Schoen, on the German monarchs.

"The meeting," the official said, "was new proof of the traditional hearty friendship between the ruling houses of Germany and Russia. The toasts exchanged are a pledge for the continuance of the good relations between the two countries. Various pending political questions were touched upon in the conference held by the statesmen accompanying their Majesties, the result showing that no conflicting views on them exist. Both sides sincerely wish for a continuance of the friendly feelings and further to cement the good relations that now exist between the two countries. It was also recognized that the international agreements in which Germany and Russia are engaged by no means conflict with those friendly relations. Both countries are as one in the purpose of a peaceful solution of every political question that may arise."

SAN JUAN, Porto Rico, June 18.—The local police have finally succeeded in running down a lottery, which has been doing business for many months past with headquarters at Carolina, near San Juan. Six persons have been arrested, and the printing and other paraphernalia has been seized.

This lottery was called La Bolsa, and it was the first to be run locally since the days of the American occupation. The Porto Ricans have been spending thousands of dollars monthly for foreign lotteries.

ORDER MME. STEINHEIL TRIED.

French Chamber of Accusation Charges Her as Principal in Double Murder.

PARIS, June 18.—The Judges of the Chamber of Accusation, which corresponds in effect to the American Grand Jury, has upheld the conclusions reached by examining Magistrate André in the case of Mme. Adolphe Steinheil, which has been the cause of the revival of scandal involving high placed personages.

The Judges' order is that Mme. Adolphe Steinheil stand trial at the Assizes Court as the principal in the murder in this city last Summer of her husband and mother.

JAPANESE CHARGE BURGLARY.

Hawaiian Strike Leaders Retort to Prosecution for Conspiracy to Murder.

HONOLULU, June 18.—The latest development of the complicated situation which has grown out of the strike of Japanese plantation laborers and the subsequent arrest of their leaders is a charge of burglary preferred to-day by Attorney Joseph Lightfoot, who represents the accused men, against High Sheriff William Henry and Attorneys William A. Kinney and Mason Prosser, counsel for the Planters' Association.

The accusation grows out of the blowing open of the safe in the office of the Jiji, a Japanese newspaper, and the seizure of books and papers belonging to Editor Soga and others. These papers are alleged to have revealed a conspiracy among the leaders of the strike to obtain control of the islands. The alleged conspiracy is now under investigation by a Grand Jury.

At a meeting of the leaders of the strike to-day M. Negoro urged that the men be advised to return to work, but this course was opposed by F. Makino and others. Although many unofficial proposals have been made with a view to restoring peace between the strikers and their former employers, nothing has yet been accomplished, and the situation remains unchanged. More than 2,000 strikebreakers are reported to be at work.

The strike leaders, Y. Soga, editor of the Jiji; F. Makino, N. Negoro, K. Kawamura, and Y. Tashak, were arraigned today on the charge preferred against them by the Grand Jury yesterday of conspiracy to murder and to induce others to commit crime in connection with the alleged attempt to take the life of Editor Sheba of the Conservative paper, Shinpo. They were all held to answer, and were released on a bond of $1,000 each, in addition to the bond of $1,250 given when they were arraigned for conspiracy to incite riot.

FRENCH DEFICIT $21,000,000.

New Tax on Capital Revealed by Inheritances Proposed by Ministry.

PARIS, June 18.—The budget for 1910 was introduced in the Chamber of Deputies to-day by Finance Minister Caillaux and shows a deficit of $21,000,000. Nine million dollars of this is charged to the budget of 1911. The Minister recommends that the remaining $12,000,000 be raised by a new tax of a cent a litre on the petroleum used in automobiles, a tax on dogs, administrative rearrangement, and a stricter enforcement of the taxes on colonial obligations and mines, and a new tax in connection with the inheritance of property.

The Minister explained that it was planned to levy this new tax on the capital revealed by inheritances, thus paving the way to the institution of a more important progressive tax on capital, by which the Government hopes to raise the $20,000,000 or $24,000,000 necessary to cover the workingmen's pensions, now being discussed by Parliament.

CROWN FOR MISS BOARDMAN.

Italy's Tribute for Her Part in Red Cross Earthquake Relief.

ROME, June 18.—The Foreign Office has had made a beautiful and artistic reproduction of the ancient Roman civic crown as a hair ornament for Miss Mabel Boardman of Washington, D. C., in recognition of services rendered by her as a member of the American Red Cross to the victims of the recent earthquake in the south. The crown, which is composed of oak leaves and acorns made of solid gold, is inclosed in a characteristic Roman box of leather, which is adorned with the royal coat of arms in gold. The ornament is engraved as follows: "To Mabel Baordman of the American Red Cross from the Italian Government as a token of gratitude, 1908-1909."

It will be sent to the Italian Embassy at Washington for delivery to Miss Boardman.

HARDEN CASE IS CLOSED.

Kuno von Moltke Expresses Regret—Editor Withdraws Appeal Against Fine.

BERLIN, June 18.—Die Zukunft this week publishes certain letters exchanged between Count Kuno von Moltke and Maximilian Harden, editor of the periodical, in which the latter agrees to withdraw his appeal against the fine of $150 imposed by the lower court in consideration of a letter from the court expressing regret for certain statements made in court reflecting upon Harden.

The Harden-von Moltke case, which grew out of the "round table" scandals of 1907, is thus brought to an end. The retrial of Prince Philip zu Eulenburg on the charge of perjury has been set for July 5.

ENGLAND MAY SEND FLEET.

Ships from China Station Perhaps for San Francisco Celebration.

LONDON, June 18.—The Foreign Office, in forwarding to the Admiralty the American invitation to participate in the naval review to be held at San Francisco next October to celebrate the rebuilding of the city after the earthquake of 1906, expressed the hope that it would be found possible to send at least a small fleet.

It is expected, consequently, that several ships will be brought from the China station, the time being too short to dispatch a cruiser squadron.

SUGAR FACTS READY FOR THE GRAND JURY

Trust Officials, Directors, Dummies, and Broker Kissel to be Called in Criminal Inquiry.

MANY SUBPOENAS ISSUED

Receiver Earle Will Bring Here the Books of the Wrecked Concern—Wise Knows the Whole Story.

The Government's inquiry into the Sugar Trust's $30,000,000 loan to Adolph Segal of Philadelphia, which became the basis of the suit of the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company which the trust settled for $2,000,000, got far enough under way yesterday to make it certain that the matter will be presented to the United States Grand Jury here for action under the criminal statutes. United States Attorney Wise, who had been in Washington conferring with Attorney General Wickersham earlier in the week, brought back to New York with him Joseph De F. Junken, counsel for Receiver Earle of the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company, now President of the Real Estate Trust Company, and was followed yesterday morning by Mr. Earle himself and Adolph Segal.

The Philadelphians brought over with them many of the books of the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company and of the Real Estate Trust Company, as well as files of correspondence showing how the Sugar Trust, after it had got the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company and the Real Estate Trust Company into its clutches, put the screws on Segal and Frank Hipple, then President of the Real Estate Trust, until the first named was in the bankruptcy courts and the latter in a suicide's grave.

Before the close of the day yesterday Mr. Earle had outlined to Mr. Wise the history of the matter, and it will now remain for Mr. Wise, with the assistance of Deputy Attorney General Crim, who has come over here from Washington, and Oliver Pagan, the department's indictment expert, to figure out the details. Mr. Junken and H. Snowden Marshall who, with ex-Gov. Black, conducted the case of the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company in a recent suit, were with Mr. Wise until late yesterday afternoon. It is understood that no effort will be spared to go to the bottom of the Sugar Trust loan and to bring criminal action against all who may be responsible.

Mr. Wise would not discuss the matter yesterday, but it is understood that many subpoenas had been issued in connection with the investigation. Mr. Segal came voluntarily to tell Mr. Wise what he knew. Receiver Earle and Attorney Junken came pursuant to subpoenas, the formality being observed on account of their relations to the litigation in the Federal courts in Philadelphia. Mr. Marshall was a willing witness, and it is understood that ex-Gov. Black will place all the information at his command before the District Attorney. As witnesses from the sugar company, it is understood that President Thomas, Attorney John E. Parsons, who is also a Director of the Sugar Trust, and various subordinates who had to do with the bookkeeping transactions involved in the matter, will be invited to tell what they know. In addition, Gustave Kissel, the broker who acted as agent for the Sugar Trust, after he had already become agent for Segal in the making of the loan, will also be called in all probability, if he is not already under subpoena, for it was learned yesterday that Mr. Kissel for some reason has postponed a trip to Europe, which he had in immediate contemplation. In addition, three clerks in his office, who with Kissel were the dummy Directors for the Sugar Trust in the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company, will be material witnesses.

Mr. Marshall and Mr. Junken as well as ex-Gov. Black declined to discuss the matter yesterday. Attorney General Wickersham was in town, but he did not visit the Federal Building.

COLER HOLDS UP $50,000.

Objects to Appropriation for New Accounting System—Attacks Metz.

Borough President Coler of Brooklyn presented a long communication to the Board of Estimate yesterday in opposition to the requested appropriation of $50,000 for the Department of Finance to allow it to complete the installation of a uniform system of accounting in the various city departments.

Mr. Coler made definite charges of extravagance against Controller Metz, in the document, and declared that the Chamber of Commerce in indorsing the proposition was unaware of its true significance. He accused the Controller of using his office for the furtherance of political ends.

Under the provisions of the Charter the $50,000 cannot be granted without a unanimous vote of the Board, and if Mr. Coler still refuses to sanction it at the next meeting, when it will come up for final consideration, the proposition will not go through.

The appropriation has already been authorized by the Board of Aldermen.

Distinction in Summer Clothes.

TWO MEN may walk along the street wearing Suits of the same fabric—perhaps even the same pattern. One man will be distinctly well dressed.

The other will—have on a Suit of Clothes.

What is the difference? Where is the difference?

The difference is in the STYLE and in the TAILOR WORK. And this difference is perhaps most evident and certainly counts for the most in the Suits that are made of thin summer fabrics.

Loeser Clothes have this element of distinction in an unusual degree.

We are directly responsible for every step in their making. We select fabrics as they come from the mills—the best fabrics produced. We take similar pains with linings and trimmings. Loeser Clothes are designed by perhaps the cleverest style-experts in the country, and every Suit is TAILORED into shape by experienced craftsmen.

The result is that a man in a Loeser Suit is invariably a WELL DRESSED man—and that is true after many months of wear, because good tailor work makes Loeser Clothes hold their shape and character.

The summer stocks are at high water mark. Light and dark colors of light weight. The best and coolest serges. Two and three garment models. Sizes and proportions to fit men of every build. In short, SATISFACTION for every man who comes in here to-day looking for cool summer Clothes.

TAFT PLAN FOR TAX SPLITS COMMITTEE

East and West Divided as to Levies on Earnings Used to Pay Bonds.

DUTY PUT ON PRINT PAPER

New England Senators Said to Have Made a Deal for Duty on Hides —Senators Clash.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 18.—Without much discussion the Senate adjourned this evening at 7 o'clock, leaving the income tax amendment and the disposal of the whole matter pending. It will be taken up first thing to-morrow and the indications are to-night that by unanimous consent the whole matter will go over until action is taken on all the schedules. That agreement was almost reached to-day, but the tax was taken up so near time for adjournment that Mr. Bailey refused to end the matter.

Mr. Aldrich announced that it was the committee's fixed determination to offer the corporation tax as a substitute for the Bailey-Cummins amendment. This assurance was taken by Mr. Cummins as a promise of a direct vote and he was willing to accept it. Mr. Bailey was more difficult to persuade.

The substitute proposed by President Taft for a tax on corporate earnings instead of on individual incomes was not completed, Mr. Aldrich explained. He thought it would be ready not later than Monday, and promised that the Finance Committee would at once report it to the Senate so that the Senators could have an opportunity to study it before it is taken up. Under no circumstances, he said, would it be introduced later than twenty-four hours before it is called up for formal consideration.

Division in the Committee.

The committee had no formal meeting to-day, and it was understood the Attorney General was still working on the draft of the proposed amendment. Meanwhile the committee is not quite agreed on all details of the measure. The important point, which threatens to cause a real division among the committee members, is the question of taxing that part of a corporation's earnings set aside for the payment of interest on bonds. The division here, it is understood, is somewhat geographical, the Eastern Senators being as a general thing opposed to taxing any money connected with bonds, while the Westerners are said to be in favor of finding a way to tax such fortunes as that of Andrew Carnegie, which consists almost entirely of bond holdings.

The committee and its supporters in the Senate seem in real difficulty how to proceed against bond interest, should such a feature of the tax be decided upon. There is the constitutional inhibition protecting contract obligations, which protects bonds and interest on bonds. It is suggested, however, that such a tax could be levied before distribution, or that interest could be first distributed and then taxed when it reaches the hands of the bondholders. The objection to the last proposition is, however, that it approaches too nearly the baleful income tax.

Another smaller question that is causing discussion among the members of the committee is the line of demarcation below which corporations shall be exempt. It was said to-day that the committee was practically decided on a policy of exemption, and it is believed that the moot question is simply one of economic administration.

While the insurgents are becoming more and more pleased with the concession they have forced from the committee, one or more of them will stand out flatly against the President's proposed compromise.

Hughes and Bailey Clash.

The most interesting feature of a day that dragged out in long colloquies of a personal sort was a clash between Senator Bailey and Senator Hughes of Colorado, both Democrats.

A speech from Mr. Hughes explaining his vote for a duty on lead but defending the provisions of the Democratic platform for free lumber and wood pulp with gradual reductions all along the line drew Mr. Bailey's fire. He replied that the free listing of trust-made articles would take from the Treasury $150,000,000 a year, and that in general he was opposed to so intricate a method as taxation for disposing of the trust evil.

"That platform was drafted," he said, "by one man with the purpose of carrying three Northwestern States. It did not carry them."

He said Mr. Bryan had been defeated badly on his first race, by a majority of 700,000 on his second, and by a majority of 1,200,000 on his third.

"I believe," said Mr. Bailey, "that the Democratic Party will not again risk facing that geometric progression."

Mr. Bailey then read from The Record Mr. Hughes's votes on lead, in which he had sided with the Republicans, and made remarks which brought this retort from the Colorado man:

"The Senator from Texas, large as he looms here, is no taller than I when it comes to voting according to conscience. He speaks of masters; I know none. He speaks of trusts; he should be specific. If his remarks were directed toward me then there is nothing in the world more false. I wish to say that I will never train my guns to wound a man within the party ranks."

That practically ended the wordy war, and consideration of the paper schedule was then resumed.

Mr. La Follette offered an amendment limiting until July 1, 1912, the committee's rate of $4 a ton on paper. That was defeated, as was Mr. Stone's amendment putting paper and pulp on the free list and Mr. Brown's free listing of paper. The committee's proposition was then agreed to, 44 to 32.

Republicans voting against the committee were: Beveridge, Bristow, Brown, Burkett, Cummins, Dolliver, La Follette, Smith of Michigan—eight in all. It was said around the cloakrooms that the committee secured its final success by a trade on the part of the New Englanders by which they agreed to accept the 15 per cent. duty on hides in return for the duty on print paper and wood pulp. Wood pulp will probably be taken up to-morrow.

CHANDLER CHAMPIONS TAFT.

Declares He Is Making the Biggest Fight for the People.

CONCORD, N. H., June 18.—William E. Chandler, ex-United States Senator and ex-Secretary of the Navy, issued a signed public statement to-night in which he said:

> All progressive and radical Republicans should promptly sustain President Taft in the two great fights he has bravely inaugurated. The question of a coming graduated income tax pending before the State Legislatures all over the Union and of an immediate National tax on all corporation incomes is the biggest fight for the people that any President has made. The malefactors of great wealth will renounce and denounce the President, whom they have thought they could control. The Sugar Trust, the Standard Oil Company, and the Steel Company will turn their batteries against the President's plans. The progressives should see their opportunity and rush as one man to the President's support as the plutocrats desert him.

Mr. Chandler suggests that the income tax is the way to provide "for our huge army and navy expenditures, which it seems impossible to lessen."

SWINDLE AMERICAN TRADERS.

Warning Sent by Consul Against the Black Band at Smyrna.

WASHINGTON, June 18.—"Look out for an organized band of swindlers," is the warning sounded by Vice Consul General E. A. Magnifico at Smyrna, Asiatic Turkey, in a report on the pecuniary losses sustained by a number of American business men through dishonest methods of the Black Band at Smyrna.

It is estimated that at least $250,000 has been fraudulently obtained from European firms by the Black Band in the last ten years, and officially published warnings in England and Germany had a salutary effect there.

The swindling is done by sending bills of lading in excess of the real value of shipments, shipping raw materials from Turkey of lower quality than ordered, and short weights.

TAFT CONTINUES TO LOSE.

Coupled with Gen. Edwards, President Is Again Beaten at Golf.

WASHINGTON, June 18.—For the third time this week President Taft was defeated to-day in a golf match. Gen. Edwards was the President's partner, and their opponents were Senator Bourne of Oregon and Capt. Archibald W. Butt, Military Aid to the President. The latter won by one up.

As the links at Chevy Chase were heavy from yesterday's downpour, the playing to-day was a little slow.

NEW CHAPLAIN FOR SENATE.

Dr. Pierce, Pastor of Taft's Church, Is Temporarily Designated.

WASHINGTON, June 18.—The Rev. Dr. Ulysses Grant B. Pierce, pastor of All Souls' Unitarian Church of this city, was to-day designated by a Senate resolution to act as Chaplain until otherwise ordered.

Mr. Pierce is pastor of the church which the President attends, and succeeds the Rev. Edward Everett Hale, deceased.

BRIDAL COUPLE FOUND DEAD.

Belief That They Were Victims of Poisoned Candy.

WILLIAMSPORT, Penn., June 18.—Albert Munro and his bride of a week were found dead in their room this afternoon. On a dresser was a partially filled box of chocolates. There was nothing to indicate violence and it is believed they were victims of poisoned candy. They were in their night clothes and the gas was burning brightly, indicating that they had been overcome before getting into bed. The woman's body was on the floor and the man was leaning forward across the bed.

The dead man was a clerk in the office of Chief Vernes of the Pennsylvania Railroad police, and was 22 years old. When last seen last night he was in the best of spirits, and the suicide theory is given but little credence. A thorough investigation is now being made by the Coroner and the police authorities.

The couple were married on June 10 and had just returned from their wedding tour.

GREET PRESIDENT NICHOLS.

Dartmouth Alumni Welcome New College Head.

The alumni of Dartmouth College in and around New York held an informal reception for President-elect Ernest F. Nichols at the Hotel Astor last night. About 200 alumni were present, and with Dartmouth cheers and songs gave the new President a hearty welcome. Luther B. Little, President of the Alumni Association, presided and read a telegram from retiring President W. J. Tucker, in which he congratulated the New York alumni on their opportunity to introduce Dr. Nichols to the entire alumni body.

Charles F. Mathewson, a Trustee, introduced the new President and outlined his career up to the present time. He said that the selection had been made only after two years of serious consideration, and that among the letters of appreciation on the choice was one from President Butler of Columbia University, on whose Faculty Dr. Nichols has served for a number of years.

Dr. Nichols responded briefly. He said, in part:

"The daring of your Trustees in their appointment has received the praise it deserves, but it has hardly occurred to any one the amount of courage it has taken for men to follow in President Tucker's footsteps. I want to see Dartmouth reach a height where the country at large will acknowledge her supremacy in moral vigor, mental power, and bodily prowess."

HELD FOR A 10-CENT THEFT.

Judson Todd's Chauffeur Used That Much Gasoline in Owner's Auto.

William Foley, a chauffeur employed by Judson Todd of the State Realty and Mortgage Company, 11 Pine Street, was arraigned in the West Side Court yesterday morning charged with the laceny of 10 cents' worth of gasoline. Foley had taken Mr. Todd's automobile out Thursday night without the latter's permission, and in the course of the ride the car collided with a street car on Broadway, near Fifty-fifth Street, and was wrecked.

"I think it is my duty," said Mr. Todd yesterday, "to make an object lesson of this case. Foley says he went only a few blocks, and if he did he must have traveled very slowly, for he was gone over three hours. I have had the fellow a week, and he came to me highly recommended by people who ought to know what kind of a man an efficient chauffeur should be."

Ruppert's Beer Bottled at the Brewery.

Jacob Ruppert, with the erection of the new addition which was finished a few days ago, now possesses the largest Bottling Establishment in the East and the most sanitary plant in the world. It covers an area of 100 feet on Third avenue and 200 feet on Ninetieth Street. Two hundred men are kept constantly employed. The erection of the new building was made necessary to keep pace with the constantly increasing demands, for Knickerbocker Beer has come to be known as the most popular brew in America.

Cleanliness is the dominant characteristic in Mr. Ruppert's establishments. Everything therein is wholesome and hygienic. No germs or bacteria find lodgment to affect the purity of the beverage. Beer is a sensitive product. Like milk or other liquids, it may be affected by environment.

Ruppert's beer is stored and aged in glass-lined steel tanks and is drawn therefrom directly into the bottles without coming into contact with the air. The bottles have been thoroughly rinsed and soaked in especially filtered water; the air used in connection with the machinery is also sterilized and filtered and the beer is drawn from the tanks under carbonic gas pressure. The filled bottles are pasteurized and wrapped in perfection wrappers for shipment.

An idea of the magnitude of the shipping department may be gathered from the fact that there are three automobile trucks, fifty wagons and one hundred horses constantly employed for the daily deliveries of this popular beverage.

ENGLAND WANTS US TO DROP CHINA LOAN

Bases Diplomatic Protest on Our Delay and Danger of Upsetting Whole Plan.

NO WITHDRAWAL LIKELY

Knox Regards Position as Justified—Germany Understood to Favor American Participation.

LONDON, June 18.—Great Britain has asked America not to press her claim for participation in the Hankow-Sze-chuen Railroad loan of $27,500,000 which British, German, and French bankers stand ready to take up. This request has been sent to James Bryce, the British Ambassador at Washington.

Great Britain points out that the arrangements for this loan were concluded after the greatest difficulty, entailing long negotiations between the British, German, and French bankers concerned and the Chinese Government. As America did not ask to join therein, it was presumed that she did not desire to take the share to which she was entitled under her convention with China.

WASHINGTON, June 18.—The views of the British Government on the $27,500,000 Hankow-Szechuen loan were submitted to the State Department by A. Mitchell Inness, British Charge d'Affaires here, upon cabled instructions from London. Huntington Wilson, Assistant Secretary of State, denied to-day that the representation of the British diplomat amounted to a "protest." He said it was merely a suggestion that the United States Government should discuss the matter with the Governments of the other nations whose bankers are interested in sharing the loan, so as to arrive at some practical working plan.

Our Delay Ground of Protest.

There is reason for saying, however, that in the view of the British Embassy the representation was most decidedly a "protest," both diplomatically and practically. Mr. Inness based his protest upon the delay on the part of this Government in signifying to the British, French, and German Governments its desire that American capitalists should participate in the proposed loan. He pointed out that Mr. Fletcher, the American Chargé in Peking, had been cognizant of the negotiations there by which the German, French, and British Governments reached the agreement with China on behalf of their bankers, and that six weeks ago Mr. Fletcher knew that the matter was approaching settlement.

Yet instead of cabling the information to his Government, Mr. Fletcher contented himself with sending the notification by mail. While this letter was making its slow journey from Peking to Washington the other Governments were completing their arrangements with China, so that when the United States finally decided to act the matter needed only the formal ratification. Mr. Inness pointed out that tht attempt of the United States now to reopen the matter might endanger the whole loan, and would in any event lead to further delay, which his Government desired to avoid.

Secretary Knox was not in Washington to-day, and no authoritative statement could be obtained as to what this Government will do regarding the British protest. The Secretary, however, regards the Chinese-Anglo-American agreement of 1904 as ample warrant for the position the Government has taken, and now that the Chinese Government has shown a willingness to recognize that agreement as binding in this case there is no doubt that Mr. Knox will insist upon it unless all three of the other Governments join in the protest.

Germany Said to be on Our Side.

So far Germany has shown no disposition to join with Great Britain, and France has remained quiet. It was announced in these dispatches some time ago, on unimpeachable authority, that Germany was disposed to view with pleasure the advent of the United States as a participant in the commercial ventures in China. The outcry of German bankers in Peking against the proposition to admit the Americans to the loan has not received the backing of their Government up to the present, and there is no indication that this backing will be forthcoming.

The old-fashioned indifferent attitude of the United States Government toward these far eastern commercial opportunities was well put in a diplomatic epigram, "The United States are always standing for the open door; they never walk in." This attitude no longer exists.

It is recognized clearly in diplomatic circles that the ground for protest on the part of Great Britain is political rather than commercial. From the point of view of the profits, a loan of $27,500,000 divided among the bankers of three or four nations is too small to stir up much of a controversy. But politically it is of vastly more importance, and therein lies the reason for the improbability of joint action by Germany, France, and Great Britain. The strongest argument that has been advanced against a rearrangement of the protocol for the loan so as to include the American bankers is that it might give the Chinese Government an opportunity to consider that it had repudiated an agreement with Europe, which would be a bad precedent.

Bankers associated with the China syndicate, consisting of J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and the National City and First National Banks, said yesterday that they did not believe that the plan of the United States to obtain participation in the Chinese railroad loan would be changed as a result of the protest of Great Britain. Having made the demand for a share in the coming railroad loan, this country, they said, was not likely to recede from its position.

It was learned at the office of the International Banking Corporation that the decision to establish a branch in Peking was reached some time ago, and is simply one more step in the plan of this American banking concern to encourage United States trade in the Far East. The opening of its branch in Peking now is considered timely and fortunate in Wall Street financial circles, since the chief argument used for the exclusion of American financiers from Chinese loans was the entire absence of American banking representation at Peking.

Henry T. S. Greene, formerly Yokohama branch manager of the International Banking Corporation, is in charge of the corporation's new Peking branch, and has been authorized to erect a suitable bank building for that institution in the Chinese capital.

TRAIN ROBBERS KILL DEPUTY.

Oklahoma Officers Wound and Capture One of Three Bandits.

MUSKOGEE, Oklahoma, June 18.—In a battle between officers and three train robbers who held up a St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern freight train near Bragg, Oklahoma, early to-day, Deputy Constable Johnson Kirk was killed.

Paul Williams, one of the robbers, was shot through the breast and captured. The other two robbers escaped.

The object of the robbers was to rob the train crew, who had just received their pay envelopes. The railroad men resisted the robbers, and the sound of firing soon brought Kirk and Deputy Constable Wicks to the scene. Kirk was shot through the head and instantly killed.

BIG INHERITANCE TAX PAID.

Cook County, Ill., Receives $183,844 from Nelson Morris's Estate.

CHICAGO, June 18.—Cook County was enriched $183,844.31 yesterday when a check for that amount was paid to the County Treasurer from the estate of Nelson Morris as inheritance tax. This is in accordance with the appraisement made by order of Judge Rinaker in the county court.

It is the largest amount ever paid to the county as an inheritance tax. The total value of the estate was placed at $16,703,427.78.

PROTEST OF UNIONS REJECTED BY NAGEL

Secretary Refuses to Discontinue Sending Immigrants to Sections That Need Labor.

KEEFE FAVORED A CHANGE

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 18.—Secretary Nagel stepped to the front to-day as champion of the work being done by the Division of Information of the Bureau of Immigration in distributing immigrants throughout the country and preventing in a considerable measure their congestion in the great cities. He refused to limit the extent of this work, although such limitation was recommended by Daniel J. Keefe, Commissioner General of Immigration. Going even further, the Secretary declared in a formal statement that he expected the influence of the division to be greatly increased within a year.

The reasons that prompted Commissioner General Keefe to ask for a curtailment of the powers of a division directly under him are not very clearly known. This division is presided over by T. V. Powderly, once President of the Knights of Labor, and at one time prominent in union labor circles. Mr. Keefe was President of the Longshoremen's Union, and rendered real service in the last campaign, when he rebelled openly and fought Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, who sought to swing the labor vote to Bryan.

Whatever were Commissioner General Keefe's reasons, he suggested formally to Secretary Nagel that the powers of the Division of Information be curtailed. He wanted the office in the Maritime Building, New York, abolished.

Secretary Nagel to-day declared the Commissioner General's view to be "narrow."

"If the restricted view is accepted and the New York office is discontinued," he added, "it goes without saying that the division itself is to all intents and purposes abandoned. The mere distribution of printed information, translated into various languages, among immigrants whom we are removing from Ellis Island with the greatest possible dispatch, can scarcely be said to serve a practical purpose."

The Secretary said not only would he not curtail the division's powers, but he expected its authority would be greatly increased when the long-expected report was made by the Immigration Commission appointed by Congress. This report is looked for within the next twelve months.

Labor leaders have been almost solidly opposed to the work of the Division of Information since its organization.

J. I. McCormick Held as Swindler.

MR. TAFT'S INTERVENTION.

Until he sent his message to Congress opposing the immediate enactment of an income tax and urging a 2 per cent. tax on corporate dividends, President TAFT had kept a lock on his lips. He had firmly declined to utter an official word that would influence the action of the House or the Senate as to the tariff, while the reports as to his personal expressions were too vague and conflicting to justify any definite inference regarding his views or intentions. It was stated by those supposed to know that he meant wholly to respect the independence of Congress and to act for himself when he should have a bill to approve, to veto, or to leave unsigned.

The message was an abrupt departure from the line of conduct he had pursued. It had an immediate effect on the situation in the Senate, for it divided the forces opposed to Senator ALDRICH on the income tax and saved that wily leader from what threatened to be a serious and mortifying check. Whatever its intention, that, beyond all question, was its actual effect. It went further, for the splitting of the combination against Mr. ALDRICH on the income tax inevitably weakened the opposition on the tariff proper and strengthened the Finance Committee. Here, therefore, was an instance of substantial and effective intervention by the Executive. What was the occasion for it?

According to the message, this is the reasoning of the President in a nutshell. More revenue is needed. An income tax clause would be contrary to the decision of the Supreme Court, and would result either in the reversal of that decision, which would be unfortunate for the dignity and prestige of the court, or in its renewal, which would prevent the getting of any revenue from the tax. Hence it would be wise to seek revenue from other sources, and the tax on corporate dividends is the best.

Let us put aside for the moment the argument for corporation taxation, which is open to several reasonable objections, and confine attention to the assumption that special taxes are required for revenue. This assumption distinctly and obviously rests on the refusal of Congress to revise the tariff in a way that will produce revenue. Why should the President take it for granted that Congress will refuse to do that? Why should he surrender in advance his own right, and abandon his duty, to veto a tariff bill that failed to provide revenue?

There is no question that a tariff bill can be made to yield revenue. If the principle laid down in the Republican platform—a principle originating in Mr. TAFT's own State, approved by him before the National Convention and repeatedly indorsed by him during the campaign—were honestly and intelligently applied to the tariff, there is no room for doubt that revenue would very substantially be increased. In the Dingley tariff there are numerous taxes which are wholly or nearly prohibitory, which entirely prevent imports or keep them at an insignificant figure. If these were reduced to equal the difference in cost at home and abroad, a very considerable increase in imports, with corresponding revenue, would immediately ensue. Then there are the ridiculous and extortionate taxes on the materials of American industry—wools, for example, cotton yarn and thread, paper and pulp, lumber, the various metals and ores. A reduction of these in accordance with the principle of the Republican platform would stimulate American enterprise, benefit the consumers, and bring in substantial revenue. Then again there is a great mass of taxes, such as those in the pottery, glass, hardware, and textile schedules, which, though not prohibitory, are extravagant and oppressive, on which the reduction promised by the party in power would produce solid revenue returns. This is especially true of the great number of compound duties and duties raised by tricks of classification.

Is it not a reasonable query why Mr. TAFT, if he was convinced of the need of revenue, did not insist that it should be met by the fulfillment of his party's explicit pledges and his own, instead of injecting into the discussion ideas and suggestions wholly impertinent to the issue raised by those pledges? The President has not been regarded in Washington as an astute politician. It has been supposed that he prefers to deal with National affairs from an elevated standpoint, considering only the large and lasting interests of the people. Surely, from that point of view, he should have determined to do all that lies in his power to induce or force his party to keep its pledges as to those interests. On the minor point of revenue it is clear that this course would have been the most practical, the simplest, the best. On the main issue, the loyalty of the party and the President to solemn and definite promises and the promotion of the rights of the people, it would—with all respect to Mr. TAFT—have been the most honorable.

SMUGGLERS FITLY PUNISHED.

The sentences in the United States Circuit Court Thursday of the three persons convicted of smuggling were severe but just. Quick trials, such as these culprits had, followed by the prompt and fit administration of justice, account for the respect in which the Federal courts are held in the popular mind. The appointed Judges compare more than favorably with the elected Judges.

Smuggling is one of the most contemptible of crimes, and yet the one generally least condemned by public opinion. Judge RAY pointed out, in imposing the sentences, that while violation of the customs laws amounted to grand larceny, 95 per cent. of the women who travel do not regard smuggling as a crime at all. Their eyes will be opened, however, whenever the law acts so promptly and effectively with professional smugglers.

Judge RAY indicates that the amateur smuggler, the tourist who tries to smuggle through a set of furs or some jewelry or laces, may suffer as severely if brought before him. Of course, it is well understood that more or less of the trouble travelers have with the customs is due to carelessness or misunderstanding of the regulations. But deliberate smuggling is not uncommon and, if detected, it should be severely punished. The law should be enforced and respected.

A PREMATURE FAREWELL.

We note with sadness in The Boston Transcript a touching farewell to American humor which is surely premature. American humor has seemed to persist, and even to thrive, though many attempts to analyze it, to differentiate its quality from that of Irish humor, English and Gallic humor have been more painstaking than successful. The humor of America seems to be largely a matter of spirit and temperament and to defy analysis. An English observer lately declared that the American joke is always concerned with death. This is not wholly true, of course, but violent contrasts are the delight of American jokers. We fancy that American humor still lives and will live, though the professional American humorist may not be so common and aggressive as he was.

The Transcript argues that the protest of a Chinaman resident here against the gross caricaturing of his people is a blow at current American humor. The Irishman, the German, and the Jew have solemnly protested against the jesters' treatment of their racial and national peculiarities, and to some effect. The mother-in-law joke, we have been officially informed, has been banished from the programmes of a chain of profitable vaudeville theatres. The "Summer girl," the commuter, the hotel clerk, and the cook may be expected to join in the outcry against the jesters who have lampooned them. But the survival of American humor is not in the least dependent on the preservation of the stock in trade of professional jesters. The truest American humor does not play around any one set of victims.

Another argument of the Boston newspaper is that the confessedly comic journals are deliberately abandoning humor. As a matter of fact few of them have ever done much to develop or preserve the National sense of humor. How rarely does a smile light up the countenance of the lucky man who has gained possession of the single comic weekly in a barber's shop! Nor does the fact that one of the so-called comic papers has come out, with an affectation of seriousness, in support of Christian Science and woman suffrage satisfy us that American humor is on the decline. On the contrary, it seems to indicate that at least one of those strangely grave periodicals has actually developed a genuine sense of humor.

RAISING CALVIN'S GHOST.

Now comes from Glasgow a Presbyterian preacher, who should be of good old stock and full of righteousness, to tell us that if JOHN CALVIN were alive these days he would look on life more cheerfully, and probably approve of the theatre and dancing. CALVIN cannot reply, but how can this Scottish pastor hope to escape the wrath? A mere matter of 350 years would never have changed the faith, softened the gravity, weakened the morals of the Picardy evangelist. If he were alive to-day, leaving dancing out of the question, as an obvious device of Satan, what would the theatre have to offer to CALVIN except its evidence of shame? Can we reconcile the stern faith of the founder of the twin doctrines of predestination and election with the wicked perversity of ISSEN, that monster who argues deliberately that the sins of the fathers justify and excuse the weaknesses of the sons? Might we harmonize the beautiful and imperishable doctrine of infant damnation with ISSEN'S ideas of heredity?

No, from SHAKESPEARE, who opened his eyes the year pious CALVIN'S were closed, to BERNARD SHAW and CLYDE FITCH, the whole race of playmakers would be scorned by CALVIN; the mummers would not escape his wrath. As for the dancing and singing women ycleept "show girls," oh, fie! Our Glasgow visitor is mistaken, or has stated his case badly. Truly, modern Calvinism is a weak, diluted makeshift thing, but it is none of CALVIN'S. He accepted no compromises; the glare of the burning fagots never made him falter. Because modern Calvinists, even they who come from Glasca, where of old sound, hard doctrine thrived, are a poor lot, let us not assume that CALVIN living would be the same. For then he would not be CALVIN.

A Chicago dispatch reports a "record price for live hogs." What about the price paid by the American people for the manipulation of the tariff by the majority in Congress in the interest of the monopolistic trusts—the Sugar Trust, for example?

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Old Age as a Bar to Employment.

Again there has been brought to our attention, with an appeal for advice, the hard case of an elderly man who, through no fault or incapacity of his own, finds himself out of employment and compelled to find a new place. The letter begins with the statement that the writer recently read in THE TIMES of a reformed convict to whom "another chance" and work were given, with the result that he is now a respected citizen of independent means. It then says:

> Now, I am not a convict, and have never done a dishonest thing in my life. I possess a good education, can speak and write English, French, and German, and understand music thoroughly. My only crime is that of being over fifty years old. Does that disbar me from every position? Must I commit suicide, or can I get a chance to earn my living and care for my family? It does not look so. I have tried hard and long, but there seems to be no place for me.

Our correspondent does not say how much over 50 he is, or what other qualifications for employment he has beyond those mentioned, which are not, in themselves, of great importance, or of much value to anybody except their possessor. Assuming that his burden of years is not yet heavy, and that he still has all or most of the efficiency that has brought him safely through life so far, it is easy to understand the sense of wrong and injustice he expresses and to sympathize with his discouragement. The probabilities are that by no means all doors are closed to him, and that he will find one open if he can only seek long enough, but there is no doubt of the general reluctance among employers to "take on" other than young men or those still in their prime.

This reluctance, curiously enough, is in part the result of newly realized duties and obligations to faithful employes. With comparative frequency employers now make some sort of provision for such men after their working days are over, and the likelihood that this will soon have to be done for the elderly man if the small remainder of his capacity is utilized, if not a decisive reason for rejecting him, at least makes his chances less than they would be if a cold discharge at the end of his usefulness were to end the relation. Some employers who would so end it, yet dislike the task and avoid the necessity for performing it as much as they can, while those more considerate plead that in justice to themselves they can pension only after long services.

Our correspondent, we fear, must take conditions as they are and make the best of them. We must all endure the penalties, as well as enjoy the advantages, of living in a very "practical" world, and be as thankful as we can that the practicality is becoming more and more mitigated by higher virtues as time goes on.

A Wonder, If Not a Winner.

EDWARD PAYSON WESTON, in spite of storms and indigestions and wounds from a broken bottle—EDWARD P., by the way, is a total abstainer, so nobody need be suspicious about that bottle's contents—is still counting the innumerable ties of the Union Pacific Railway, and he is nearing his destination, if not at a rate to bring him to it within his alloted hundred days, at least at one marvelously rapid for a man of 70 years after walking three-quarters of the way across the American continent.

Most men of half his age would think that they had well earned a week's rest after achieving the distance traveled on any one of the days WESTON calls bad, for when the difficulties have been most abundant he has rarely failed to cover twenty-five miles, and from forty to fifty miles a day has been his average. Already he would have worn out half a dozen good horses.

His journey, though it may not end as soon as he hoped, will still have been an amazing display of human endurance and capacity. It does not now promise to be exactly a success, but it will be very far from a failure.

A Case of Doctors Disagreeing.

When doctors begin to use epithets like "egregious leprophobia" in describing each other, it is fair for the layman to assume that professional amenities are in danger. To be sure, "egregious," though some people have forgotten it, can mean the distinction of superiority as well as that of inferiority, and is not necessarily offensive, but the "phobias" are all foolish or morbid, and therefore the use of "leprophobia" by The New York Medical Record in telling what the health authorities of Washington are doing in the case of JOHN EARLY is a plain indication of indignation mingled with contempt.

At any rate the Washington doctors won't like it. And it does look as if they had made a rather serious blunder, both in the diagnosis of EARLY'S case and in its treatment. The man had soldierized in Cuba and the Philippines, but there is no reason for supposing that he had ever come in close contact with lepers in either place, while it is known that after he came home from the wars he worked in a pulp mill and handled chemicals which have given others exactly the severe form of dermatitis from which he soon suffered. It seems that when he went to Washington for treatment he said to the doctor who examined him, "I wonder if I have leprosy." That seems to have acted as a "suggestion" on this doctor and several others, none of whom had ever seen the disease, who were called in. They decided that EARLY did have leprosy, shut him up in a brick cell, and refused to let him out at the request of a New York specialist who insists that the diagnosis is wrong, and that imprisonment wouldn't be necessary even if it were correct.

The New York Health Board joins in the latter statement, and beyond question the best modern authorities on leprosy agree that in northern climates it is much less contagious than other diseases—tuberculosis, for instance—the victims of which are not segregated, and that the legendary fear of it is largely a superstition of ignorance. As to whether EARLY has or has not leprosy, that question would seem to be answered in the negative if, as The Medical Record says, his dermatitis created in a few weeks lesions which it would have taken the other malady long years to produce, and those lesions, since his imprisonment, have slowly disappeared without treatment, the cause of them having been removed. Those facts—if they be facts, and The Medical Record is presumably well informed—settle the problem, for leprosy is as slow as it is sure, and as sure as it is slow.

BRIDGE INVESTMENTS.

Wants Financial Genius Injected Into Their Administration.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your editorial to-day upon Judge Gaynor's speech in Brooklyn you refer to the unhappy experience of the city in the management of the East River bridges. The fact that these bridges are not in use to their capacity is not the fault of the people, whose taxes have paid for the bridges, but is the fault of the management by the city authorities in failing to grant franchises to traction companies for the use of said bridges.

There was more than one application for a franchise over the Queensboro Bridge, and one franchise was passed by the Board of Estimate—a franchise more drastic in its impositions upon the traction company than any heretofore granted in Manhattan. The company accepted its conditions and gave bonds to build its road within a given time, and now the Public Service Commission has rejected the franchise, and leaves the $20,000,000 investment for the use of foot passengers, undertakers, and chauffeurs.

In the same way, when the Manhattan Bridge is completed, no trolley cars will be run through the Flatbush Avenue extension and over this bridge to relieve the congestion on the Brooklyn Bridge, unless franchises are speedily granted to the traction interests. The application of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company for an elevated franchise through Flatbush Avenue to this bridge has been rejected, although a similar application for an elevated line over the Williamsburg Bridge was granted and the trains are now running over that bridge.

If some of the railroad talent which has developed the Pennsylvania system, the Lackawanna system, and the New York Central system in recent years could be injected into the present city administration perhaps the people would get the results in accommodation and use which these huge bridge investments ought to give.

BRITISH LINERS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your correspondent "Kinarla" is upsetting himself needlessly. It has always struck me in the various stages of a not uneventful career that there are a number of good people who are always looking for some great underlying motive in the most trivial of commonplaces. Here we have a good example: "Kinarla" is troubled because the British transatlantic liners are not designated every time by names suggestive of the country to which they belong.

Let him trouble no more. No great national question is at stake—simply this: In 1840 the Cunard Line commenced its marvelous service, which remains unexcelled by any company in the world, it holding all records for speed and safety. It decided to name its boats by words ending in ia, and hence, Britannia (the first) and later (the quoted) Mauretania, Lusitania, and Pannonia.

The White Star Line selected the distinctive ending ic, hence the Arabic, Teutonic, and Majestic.

That's all there is to it. The Cunard Mauretania does not require a title suggestive of its land for all the world to know that she is British. No other country has ever produced such a monument of precision, speed, and safety. She could only be British. She belongs to the company which, since 1840, has not lost a life. That is why she invariably has a full complement of passengers—of all nationalities—who will have the best.

Lincoln on Tariff Promises.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Lincoln has been one of the best assets of the Republican Party. Naturally, the leaders of the organization have been more eager to call upon his great name than to heed his precepts, and yet it is possible that even Mr. Aldrich might detect some pertinency to the present situation in the "Remarks at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, February 15, 1861":

> Assuming that direct taxation is not to be adopted, the tariff question must be as durable as the Government itself. It is a question of National housekeeping. It is to the Government what replenishing the meal-tub is to the family. Ever varying circumstances will require frequent modifications as to the amount needed and the sources of supply. So far there is little difference of opinion among the people. It is only whether, and how far, duties on imports shall be adjusted to favor home productions. In the home market that controversy begins. One party insists that too much protection oppresses one class for the advantage of another; while the other party argues that, with all its incidents, in the long run all classes are benefited. In the Chicago platform there is a plank upon this subject which should be a general law to the incoming Administration. We should do neither more nor less than we gave the people reason to believe we would when they gave us their votes.

Mystery of Alien Criminals.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Our Government maintains at every port in Europe where passengers embark for this country a well-paid set of inspectors for the purpose of preventing undesirable emigrants from embarking. To make this precaution doubly sure they are again sifted on their arrival here, and if any have escaped from the other side and caught here they are to be deported. With all these precautions, a very large percentage of the immigrants from certain sections are either hardened criminals or paupers. How do they get through?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

On the editorial page of your issue of June 10th appears an item headed "A Queer Law of Libel," dealing with the case of a Welshman named Thomas Artemus Jones. Does it not seem possible that there is a stenographic error in the report upon which you base your comments? There is quite a similarity in sound between "Thomas Artemus Jones" and "Thomas ap Thomas Jones." The latter being the regular Welsh form for Thomas Jones, Jr.

THE CORPORATE TAX.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The proposed Federal tax on the income of corporations would be unequal in its operations and interfere with an important source of State revenues.

Such a tax would reduce dividends, and really be a tax upon the individual stockholder. There is no reason, except that he is an easier victim, why one man should be taxed upon an income derived from an incorporated business, while another man receiving an income from a similar but unincorporated business is exempt.

Most corporations are engaged in production or trade, and a special tax on such incomes from production is a hindrance to enterprise. The corporate form of doing business is necessary to modern production, and should not be discouraged by arbitrary and discriminating taxation. The special State taxes now paid by business corporations are burdensome enough, especially as, owing to the lack of comity between States, there is often double, treble, and even quadruple taxation of corporate property.

In the State of New York ordinary business corporations now pay a State income tax of 2½ per cent. when dividends are 6 per cent. or over. When the dividends are less the tax is usually a larger percentage of the income. The total receipts from this tax are more than a million dollars. These business corporations are liable, in addition, to the same local taxes on real and personal property as fall on individual property, and usually pay on relatively larger personal property assessments.

Railways pay a similar State income tax and an additional tax on gross earnings, while the street railways are on another basis; total receipts, $2,500,000. The rate on net income varies greatly, but the general range is from 2 to 5 per cent. With the gas, water, electric, and telephone corporation taxes, the State's income from these taxes is about $5,000,000. This does not include the $4,000,000 from savings banks, trust, and insurance companies. Railways and other public service corporations are also liable to local taxation on real and personal property, and to special franchise assessments for the value of the privilege of using or crossing highways.

Special taxes on corporations are being used by a number of States as part of a general plan to separate sources of State and local revenues, and there is a growing tendency to increase these special taxes. In most cases such taxes are in addition to full liability to local taxation. Generally, manufacturing corporations are excepted from special State taxes, in order to encourage production.

It was stated in a Washington dispatch that the tax on corporate dividends is similar to the English system of taxing incomes "at the source." The English tax applies to all incomes, and so much of the tax as is paid over by a corporation is credited to the individual when he finally makes his settlement with the Government. At least this is fair as between all forms of incomes.

It is argued sometimes in favor of special taxes that the shareholder obtains an income without actually doing any work. The same may be true of the individual owner of a business, and the argument applies with much more force to other forms of investment. Especially does it apply to the enormous incomes derived from the increasing values of land, that are in no sense due to the activity of the owner, but result largely from the growth and expenditures of the community—often, in fact, from the transportation facilities furnished by public service corporations, whose shareholders (among others) it is now proposed to tax.

NIPPERS AND PLIERS.

They Are Manufactured as Cheaply Here as In Germany.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. White's letter in this morning's TIMES on the above subject makes the mistake common in tariff discussions of overlooking entirely the wage cost of the articles which he makes. He gives us the wages paid per day, but he fails to give us the proportion which the wages paid bear to the value of the product.

The census of manufactures taken by the United States Government in 1905 shows that the wages paid in the iron and steel industry are only 15 per cent. of the value of the product. Therefore a duty of 45 per cent. is certainly ample so far as any wage cost is concerned—that is, three times the total amount paid for wages.

If your readers would go to Mr. White's factory they would see the most ingenious machinery employed in the manufacture of his nippers and pliers. Necessarily for the handling of such machines skilled labor is required. Investigations made by Mr. Blaine and again by Mr. Evarts when each was Secretary of State, as well as investigations made since that time, show that American machinery in most lines of manufacture is the most ingenious and efficient in the world, so that it is altogether probable that in point of fact the actual wage cost of each pair of pliers or nippers made in Mr. White's factory is no more than the wage cost of the similar article made in Germany.

It would be interesting to know if Mr. White's factory is one of those which is able to sell tools in Europe and South America for a price which is much lower than that at which they are sold in the United States. For example, American-made saws are sold in foreign countries for 27 per cent. less than they are sold in the United States. Sewing machines are sold at 20 per cent. less. Watches are sold at 28 per cent. less. The skill involved in the manufacture of the excellent product of Mr. White's factory cannot be greater than that involved in the manufacture of these articles to which I refer. Possibly we have not yet begun to export nippers and pliers. If not, Mr. White will find that the true future for enterprising American manufacturers is in a reduced tariff, greater freedom of trade between the United States and foreign countries, and a consequently increased market for all the products of American industry.

SPECULATING CLERKS.

Thinks Barring Them from Wall Street Would Be Unjust.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The report of Gov. Hughes's Wall Street Investigating Commission is a work of art in one respect at least. I refer to one of their recommendations:

> That brokers be prohibited from dealing for the account of any clerk or subordinate employe of any bank, trust company, insurance company, or other moneyed corporation or banker.

Of course, it is all good and proper that our rich bank and trust company Directors and officers should have the privileges and facilities which are extended to the public by members of the New York Stock Exchange, but aren't you sorry for the poor clerk upon whom the honorable commission would have the doors closed? I suppose the theory is that men of official positions are honest and beyond temptation, else they wouldn't be officials, while clerks, in the early and experimental stages of life, should have barriers erected in order to prevent any possibility of their going wrong and getting their employers into trouble. Is this just to the clerk? What is the history of the past? Isn't it true that more banks and trust companies and financial institutions of every nature have been wrecked through wrongful speculation by men in control than by men in "subordinate" positions?

Y. M. C. A. FIVE-FOOT LIBRARY.

Dr. Eliot's Announcement Starts a Hunt for the Books.

The West Side Branch of the Y. M. C. A. is preparing to install Dr. Eliot's "five foot library" as a special exhibit in their large collection in West Fifty-sixth Street. The men who frequent the library have been much interested in Dr. Eliot's plan, and when the list was announced there was considerable comment.

The librarians immediately began delving in the archives, and after considerable dusting managed to produce two of almost everything, and one of some of the less familiar books which Dr. Eliot has now declared necessary to the cultivated gentleman. The one volume they failed to find was William Penn on the "Fruits of Solitude." To their great pride they did discover Woolman's "Considerations on Pure Policy and Human Wisdom," a small age-faded volume published by the Friends' Association in 1860. Even the librarians were free to acknowledge that Woolman wasn't one of their books for daily reading.

The two sets are now set out on the library tables, and the fact becomes evident that the so-called "five-foot" collection literally measures not more than three, so that they are waiting with some anxiety to see what popular favorites are included in the remaining twenty-four inches. The librarians' cautious admission that the list has not proved to be altogether what was expected is made far more emphatic by some of the men, one of whom described his fellow-readers as "frothing at the mouth" in anger at the omission of the Bible and Shakespeare.

It is planned to keep an accurate account of the number of men who take the daily ten-minute dose prescribed from the five-foot library.

BELMONT BUYS AT LONG BEACH

Has Acquired Ten Acres Adjoining the Sandringham Club Property.

While August Belmont has been inconspicuously mentioned as one of the purchasers of property at Long Beach, L. I., it came out yesterday that the extent of his holdings in the best section of Long Beach are far larger than had been supposed, amounting to ten acres adjoining the property of the Sandringham Club and the polo grounds.

While the report of the Belmont purchase was confirmed at the offices of the Estates of Long Beach, 225 Fifth Avenue, yesterday, little of details was known there, it was said. The sale to Mr. Belmont had been made by Senator Reynolds, President of the estates company, directly to Mr. Belmont, a personal friend, and it was understood to be Mr. Belmont's wish that little publicity should be given to the deal.

It is understood that while Mr. Belmont bought the property in part as an investment as well as for a Summer home site for himself, lots will be sold only to those who by wealth and social standing are eligible to membership in the Sandringham Club. The property is on the Nassau channel side, and at present numerous channels run through it, but these are being rapidly filled in.

Seattle Fair Will Soon Have $1,500,000 Shown In Alaska Display.

SEATTLE, Washington, June 18.—The Alaska Building at the exposition opened its gold exhibit to-day with a display of $400,000 of dust, nuggets, and bars. In a few days dust and nuggets valued at $700,000, now on the way from Alaska, will be added, and the United States Assay Office and various Alaska miners have promised enough gold to make the yellow pile worth $1,500,000.

In the exhibit already assembled are Jaget Lindberg's $3,000 Nome nugget, the largest ever found in Alaska, and eighty-three other nuggets from Seward Peninsula, also Mrs. Clarence Berry's $70,000 collection of nuggets, one of which weighs 115 ounces.

Publicity Concerning the Sugar Trust.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a special dispatch to THE TIMES from Washington, published in to-day's paper, your correspondent states that "as a matter of fact officials of the department are not at all pleased at the publicity which the (Sugar Trust) matter has received thus far, despite their best efforts to keep it all secret." In the view of the present department officials the newspapers have no business to "interfere" with their work by publications such as those which have been made recently regarding this case. One of the officials said that the department should be permitted to work on such matters in secret, and that nothing should be printed until the results had been obtained.

This is rather amusing when we recall how former President Roosevelt jumped into print to "roast" the Standard Oil Company when that corporation was before the courts in the Western States, and the manner in which he endeavored to influence the decisions of the Federal Court Judges in the prosecution of that concern—in fact, his insistence that the Standard Oil Company was guilty before the case had been concluded in the courts.

VACATION HOPES.

The toil of the year is past; the grind of the sordid shop;
Now Mame and Mag once more their weary routine stop.
With a trunk or two and a bag or more
And some waists—six off, from the Boss's store—
Two natty gowns and two peachy hats,
Two fresh Marcels and two freshened rats,
Two pairs of tans and some lace stripe hose,
Two buttoned skirts—at least two long rows—
And two parasols, either green or red,
Some safety pins and a spool of thread,
A drinking cup and two tennis caps
And two great, wide hopes for two handsome chaps,
Some moonlight nights and some bosky dells—
Mayhap two rings and some wedding bells!
The toil of the year is past. In a fortnight's space, perhaps,

BOOK SUIT MAKES MRS. DICKINSON ILL

Judgment for $10,000 Obtained Against Aged Writer Who Founded King's Daughters.

SIGNED FOR "RARE" EDITION

Court Has Consented to a New Trial of the Case After Hearing New Facts.

The ill-health of Mrs. Mary Low Dickinson, the venerable authoress and founder of the International Order of the King's Daughters, is somewhat aggravated, it was learned from her friends yesterday, because of a written agreement which she made several years ago with a Boston book-publishing concern.

The book-publishing concern, judging from its circulars, is about to issue an elaborate "de luxe" edition of select French authors and dispose of it in the strictly legal way under which such "art objects" are put on the market nowadays by concerns similar to the one in question.

So unquestionable from a legal standpoint were the methods employed by the concern's agent in Mrs. Dickinson's case that judgment for more than $10,000 was returned against her in the Supreme Court here last March. When Mrs. Dickinson's side was subsequently presented to Supreme Court Justice Guy he caused the case to be reopened. It will come up before Justice O'Gorman on Monday, for retrial.

Judging from the papers in the case and the statements of her counsel yesterday, the way Mrs. Dickinson was persuaded to give her signature to the book concern is not altogether new. In November, 1904, a well-dressed, glib person called at her home, 230 West Fifty-ninth Street.

"I have called to offer you a most unique and profitable opportunity," he told her, in substance. "I come to you because your literary attainments and love of precious books is so widely known. I represent a progressive and highly reputable publishing house of Boston. It is getting out a Passy edition of Paul de Kock, the French author. It is limited to fifty numbered and registered copies for the entire world. It is composed of fifty volumes, including the illustrious author's novels, tales, vaudevilles, reminiscences, and life. How would you like to be one of the fifty fortunate possessors of such an exclusive and high-class set? Just think of what an opportunity we are offering you."

According to Mrs. Dickinson's lawyer, Melvin H. Dalberg, yesterday, Mrs. Dickinson, at about this point in the interview, interposed the objection that she was not entirely sure that the illustrious de Kock's writings were exactly suitable for a woman's library. But the agent tactfully led her thoughts away to a more agreeable subject by drawing from his pocket something which looked at first to be a rainbow, but which subsequently proved to be a beautiful prospectus, printed in red, gold, and green. From this Mrs. Dickinson learned, with growing interest, that the edition was "printed with new twelve-point Caslon type" on "genuine deckle edge, antique wove, handmade paper." It contained "50 original water colors," "50 original pen and ink sketches," "300 etchings and photogravures."

What appealed to Mrs. Dickinson particularly, however, was that, according to the rainbow-printed circular, "each subscriber would receive a monogram made from an original design cut from steel and inlaid in gold on the silk flyleaf."

The thought of that "inlaid gold monogram," judging from subsequent events, made Mrs. Dickinson forget all her literary doubts as to de Kock's suitability for women's reading. She and her lawyer also say that a pecuniary inducement was also brought up. According to her affidavit, on file in the Supreme Court, the book agent "agreed to repurchase the books within a stipulated period or to resell them at a profit of $500."

"Mrs. Dickinson was given to understand that there was a woman in West Virginia who would ultimately rebuy the books from her," said Lawyer Dalberg yesterday. "Needless to say the West Virginia woman never materialized."

That, of course, is Mrs. Dickinson's side of the controversy. The book concern which, is now suing her, does not admit ever having broached any such attractive plan. At any rate, Mrs. Dickinson signed a contract for a $2,500 Passy edition, and subsequent calls of the agent caused her to change her $2,500 Passy edition contract for a $7,500 Romainville edition of the same author. She gave notes for that sum for it. According to her lawyer, she hoped that the "West Virginia woman" was going to materialize and buy the books from her at an increased price before the notes fell due. The book concern, in time, put her notes in circulation. No "West Virginia woman" having materialized, Mrs. Dickinson refused to pay the notes when they were presented to her. So the book firm assigned their claim to a young woman who is employed in the office of their lawyer in this city, and the lawyer brought suit against Mrs. Dickinson for $7,500 and interest.

Mrs. Dickinson, who is 70 years old and in poor health, did not appear in court last March when the suit first came up. Judgment for over $10,000 was returned against her. When the facts were later explained to Justice Guy he said that the venerable writer and philanthropist was "at least entitled to her day in court." He set aside the judgment, and the case will be argued again before Justice O'Gorman on Monday. According to Lawyer Dalberg, Mrs. Dickinson is still quite ill and will probably not appear in person. An attempt was made yesterday to see the lawyer for the book concern, but he was out of town.

COURT REDUCES FERRY FARE.

From 5 to 3 Cents from Weehawken and from Bergen Point to Staten Island

Under a decision of the Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey, handed down this week, residents of North Hudson, N. J., who use the two West Shore Road Ferries from Weehawken to Manhattan; the West Shore line from West New York, N. J., to Manhattan, and the Public Service Company's line from Bergen Point, Bayonne, to Port Richmond, S. I., are entitled to a reduction in the fare from 5 to 3 cents. The fare for children under 10 years is 2 cents under the court ruling. The new rate is operative beginning to-day.

The new rates were fixed by the Hudson County Board of Freeholders on July 6, 1905, and it is the legality of these rates which the Court of Errors and Appeals, the highest court in New Jersey, has sustained.

Unless the companies controlling the ferries accept the ruling, there may be trouble at the gates at the ferryhouses on the Jersey side to-day. Passengers learned about the decision yesterday, and County Counsel John Griffin advised that no more than 3 cents could be exacted legally by the companies named after midnight last night. He said significantly that it rested with the passenger what he or she was to do if the companies insisted on collecting the old rate of fare. Even if an appeal be taken to the United States Supreme Court, County Counsel Griffin said, the legal fare pending the decision can be no more than 3 cents.

The County Counsel said, moreover, that for four years the companies had been exacting an illegal fare. The decision of the court in the matter upset the opinion of the Superior Court below that the action of the Freeholders in 1905 was illegal.

WOMEN DRIVERS IN TUXEDO SHOW RING

OBSTACLE RACE AS FEATURE

Special to The New York Times.

TUXEDO PARK, June 18.—The Tuxedo Horse Show opened to-day under splendidly favorable conditions, and with a big attendance, the boxes being well filled, and fashionable society from all the surrounding country being well represented. The weather was bright, sunny, and brisk, an invigorating breeze coming from the north. The ring competitions were close and interesting, and the blue ribbons were fairly well distributed in the seventeen classes judged, with Mrs. Sophie D. Grimmy, Richard Delafield's Brook Farm, W. B. Dinsmore, M. F. & J. J. McDonald, William V. Hoffman, and George Watson the leading winners.

Among the boxholders were Mrs. Edwin Post, Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Mr. and Mrs. George Grant Mason, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Mortimer, ex-Lieut. Gov. and Mrs. L. S. Chanler, Mr. and Mrs. Grenville Kane, Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Potter, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Tuckerman, and Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Juilliard.

The exhibits throughout were of a quality unsurpassed in the history of the annual horse show, but the strongest appeal to the spectators was made by the events in which competition was restricted to women. All the competitors were well known to the crowd, and the ladies' driving contest, for skill, through obstacles aroused great enthusiasm. The competitors lost 10 per cent. for each obstacle they struck, and 1 per cent. was deducted for each second over 100, and credited 1 per cent. for each second under 100, required to drive a horse and wagon over the course. Miss Harriet Alexander was the winner with a perfect score, as she drove through the maze in schedule time without striking an obstacle. Miss Edith Mortimer was a close second, with Miss Edith Kane third and Miss Caryl Harriman fourth.

The class for ladies' pairs of park carriage horses, horses counting half and appointments half, made another of the features. Mrs. Sophie D. Grimmy, driving Babette and Babbinette, captured the blue ribbon; Miss Edith Kane, driving George Watson's Snapshot and Wrinkle, took the red, and Miss Mary Harriman took the yellow with the Brook Farm's entry, Buster Brown and Energy.

The big day of the show will be tomorrow, when in addition to the regular ring events there will be trotting and pacing and four-in-hand classes. Summaries:

Mr. Watson's Ringing Bells reversed the recent decision of the International Horse Show and took first prize in the single-harness class against Melvalley, the winner in the earlier exhibition, and his Kitty Grey and Norena took second honors in the tandem class under fifteen hands.

His Highness and Bugle Maid, owned by Mr. Winans, took respectively first and third prizes in the competition for hacks, fifteen hands or over. His Highness captured also the Fifty Guineas Cup and the hack championship. In the competition for tandems, over fifteen hands, Mr. Winans's Cokersrosador and Proserpine were first, and Mr. Watson's My Maryland and My Maryland II. were second.

ESCAPES TAX ON SUBWAY.

Levy on Franchise Unlawful, the Court of Appeals Decides.

ALBANY, N. Y., June 18.—The contension of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company that it was exempt from assessment on its special franchise by virtue of its lease of the Subway system in New York City was sustained to-day by the Court of Appeals. The value of the company's special franchises in Manhattan was fixed by the State Tax Commission at $16,000,000 for 1905, which was reduced after a hearing to $9,000,000. The assessment was canceled on the company's claims by the lower courts, and the Court of Appeals affirmed the decision, with costs.

The court also affirmed the decision of the lower courts bearing out the contention of the Brooklyn Union Gas Company, that the cost of raw materials should be deducted from the total receipts of a corporation in determining its gross earnings upon which the franchise tax is computed.

ROW OVER PITTSBURG HOUSE.

Nixon Claims to Have Bought Bijou—Mortgage Sold to Shuberts.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., June 18.—Trouble over the sale of the Bijou Theatre of Pittsburg deepened here to-day when the Nixon interests came out with a bold statement that they had on May 18 last closed a deal for the Pittsburg playhouse, and that the claims of Klaw & Erlanger, of the Shuberts, and of Felix Isman to the house were void.

Mrs. Laura Bigger Bennett, wife of the former owner of the theatre, spent a very busy half day in Pittsburg. Mrs. Bennett does not deny that she had agreed by wire to sell her mortgage on the Bijou Theatre to Felix Isman for $160,000 and that she really did sell it yesterday to the Shubert interests for its face value, $215,000.

Mrs. Bennett, who was formerly an actress, explains this discrepancy by saying that Isman had agreed to send her money to Albuquerque, N. M., to fetch herself and her legal adviser, Dr. C. C. Hendricks of Pittsburg, but that he failed to do this. Representatives of Isman here declare that the money, $200, was sent. Mrs. Bennett says no, that the money on which she and Dr. Hendricks came to Pittsburg was furnished by the Shuberts, and that she has sold her mortgage to them.

Mrs. Bennett went into court this morning, accompanied by her attorney, and wanted to have the injunction asked by Isman set aside. She wanted to tell the court all about it, but was waved away, and told to file her papers with the Prothonotary; that the court had set Monday for the hearing, and would not change it.

DREAMLAND NOW UNIONIZED.

Gompers Sends His Congratulations to the Park Officials.

It was announced yesterday that, beginning to-day, Dreamland at Coney Island would be unionized from top to bottom. This is the first time that the park management has seen fit to bar non-union labor from the park, and in token of his appreciation of the move, President Samuel Gompers of the American Federation of Labor sent a note of congratulation last night to Samuel W. Gumpertz, manager of the park, saying that were it not that he was sailing for Europe, he would visit the park to-day, when the new régime goes into effect.

It was learned yesterday that when the Coney Island season closes, Wells Hawkes would cease to be a press agent and would become the personal representative of ex-Senator William H. Reynolds, President of the Dreamland Company. Mr. Hawkes will occupy offices with Mr. Reynolds, and will take an active part in the conduct of his affairs.

A great many theatrical people were there, among them Sir Charles Wyndham and Mary Moore, who occupied a lower box.

BIG CONVENTION HALL.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, June 18.—The largest convention hall in America is planned for Chicago, according to an announcement made to-day by Harlow N. Higginbotham, President of the World's Columbian Exposition of 1893.

Mr. Higginbotham says the land which is to form the site of the great exposition building proposed by him had either been placed under option of purchase or acquired outright, and the opinion was expressed that the project was in a fair way of being realized.

The land in question comprises the entire block between Michigan and Wabash Avenues and Thirty-ninth and Fortieth Streets, while the building is to be an almost exact replica of the Coliseum at Rome. There are to be two buildings, one 80 by 350 feet, on the north side of Thirty-ninth Street, connected with the main building by bridge and Subway. This is to serve as an annex for permanent exhibits, while the main building, about 600 by 340 feet, although eliptical in shape, is to be for conventions, expositions, and other great gatherings. Together with land it is estimated the entire investment will approximate $3,000,000.

The main building will have an arena 170 by 400 feet, while back of this will be five sloping banks of seats with a total seating capacity of about 35,000.

CAN'T DRAW TWO SALARIES.

City Needn't Pay If Employe Works Elsewhere at the Same Time.

A city employe cannot draw a salary from the city while employed elsewhere, according to a decision made by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday in the case of Robert S. Sutliff.

Sutliff in March, 1901, was appointed a clerk in one of the city departments after passing the civil service examination, at a salary of $2,000 a year. He was discharged in 1904 and entered the service of the New York Telephone Company, where he is still employed, at a greater salary than he received while working for the city.

By a writ of mandamus he was reinstated in July, 1907, then resigned, and brought suit for back salary from Jan. 22, 1904, to date, amounting to $7,049. He obtained judgment in the lower court for the full amount.

The city appealed to the Appellate Division. Yesterday's decision reverses the former verdict and orders a new trial.

CHEER BWANO TUMBO IN Y. M. C. A. JUNGLE

He and Kermit, with Their Followers, Kill Strange Beasts Before the Camera.

GAME HID BEHIND REPORTERS

Clowns and Acrobats the Other Features of a Circus to Aid the Benefit Emergency Fund.

Oski-wa-wa
Skinni-wa-wa
Bwano Tumbo
Rah! Rah! Rah!

So ran the college yell of the twenty little African natives who welcomed Teddy to the jungle last night. Bwano Tumbo appeared, mounted on an Arabian charger of near-horse hair, and surrounded by his Tennis Cabinet, a stenographer, Kermit, a wireless man, reporters, and photographers.

The wireless man set up his apparatus and flashed messages over it, the stenographer beat out material on the typewriter, and the reporters and photographers made dashes for the wild beasts which infested the jungle and crowded around them so thickly, taking notes and photographs, that Bwano Tumbo found it very difficult to get within range of the game, and when he did he couldn't shoot without killing a newspaper man or two. This he did ruthlessly, of course—there were plenty more left, and after the reporters were left bleeding in the jungle he made his way to the real game—mostly bears and monkeys. The bears almost expired at the sight of him, and needed but a slight thrust to kill them completely.

Kermit in the meantime had found a college glee club, composed partly of the Tennis Cabinet and partly of the natives. Even the stenographer sang in it when she found time. The airs which were most popular were "Under the Bambo Tree" and "As Long as the Congo Flows to the Sea." This frightened the animals more than Teddy and the photographers and reporters had done, but still they came tumbling out of the depths of the jungle, all sorts and conditions of them.

Finally the big game had all been disposed of, and then the monkeys arrived. They were greeted more pleasantly, and it wasn't long before the whole party was waltzing merrily. Bwano even sang, "I Wish I Had a Girl," while he waltzed with a monkey, but this was probably only chance.

Then the natives gave some more college yells, the glee club sang some more near-jungle songs, and finally the entire party lined up, with the game disposed picturesquely in sections, while the photographers took various photographs.

All of which was the main feature of a circus which the West Side Young Men's Christian Association gave in its athletic field, Eighth Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street, last evening to aid the Benefit Emergency Fund. The circus had been planned for Tuesday evening, but it had been interrupted almost at the very start by rain, and last night's audience was consequently a "rain-checked" one.

It was a very real circus, which started in with a side show which stared you in the face as you entered the main gate. One could obtain admittance to the side show on the payment of ten extra pennies, and thereby improve acquaintance with the tattooed man, the bearded lady, the midget, the giant, the Albino, the lion-faced boy, the wild man, the living skeleton, the snake enchantress, and the Grecian twins. The menagerie consisted mostly of the animals which Bwano Tumbo shot later.

The main performance was given under the stars. There was no tent. However, there were a sawdust ring and benches and "reserved seats" and peanut boys, and all the other things which go to make up a regular circus. And especially there were clowns, nearly twenty of them, who kept the thousand or so small boys present laughing almost all the time.

Nearly all the acts were done by the Y. M. C. A. boys, and some especially noteworthy ones were performed by the gymnastic team, composed of Messrs. Gleason, Levine, Long, Dittman, Anastas, Simmons, Schade, Daley, Lauterwasser, Studebaker, Stepat, and Dietrick.

The clowns were Messrs. Bechtold, Marcus, Stepat, Studebaker, Martin, Lauterwasser, Newman, McIntosh, and others. Messrs. Gleason and Levine did some extraordinary hand balancing, and there was an anonymous prizefight which ended in a knockout. The ringmaster was Alexander McD. Stoddart.

EDITOR GOES TO JAIL.

Must Serve Six Months for Criminal Libel in a Campaign.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, June 18.—Davis Pasocoe, editor of The Germantown Telegraph, entered the county prison at Holmesburg to-day to serve a sentence of six months imposed upon him by Judge Magill, following conviction on a charge of criminal libel brought by ex-Sheriff Wilson H. Brown.

Mr. Pasocoe, supported by the sentiment of practically all of the reformers who helped win the victory of 1906, had made persistent efforts to escape paying the penalty. An appeal was made to the Superior Court for a new trial, and that failed. An effort was made to get the case before the Supreme Court for a new trial, and that failed.

Finally an appeal was made to the State Board of Pardons, supported by letters from Judge Magill, District Attorney Rotan, and others. The Judge who imposed the sentence urged upon the Board that the ends of justice had been served by the conviction. That body, including the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Commonwealth, the Secretary of Internal Affairs, and the Auditor General refused a pardon. This was the last hope of the editor's friends, and when that failed he surrendered to the officers of the court.

This is the first time in many years that an editor of standing has been sent to jail in Pennsylvania for criminal libel, the courts usually only imposing a fine.

ANDERSON TO KEEP OFFICE.

President Taft Reassures Collector Before Negroes in Washington.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, June 18.—President Taft to-night publicly told Charles W. Anderson, Collector of Internal Revenue for New York City, that he was not likely to be disturbed in his office.

Mr. Anderson is one of the most prominent of the negro Republican politicians of the country. He made a speech to-night at the joint graduation exercises of the three negro High Schools of Washington. President Taft also made a speech, and handed out the diplomas to the classes. In the course of his remarks Mr. Anderson delivered a fulsome eulogy of the President, dwelling upon his friendship for the negro race. He went on to declare that he said what he did from conviction and not for any possible bearing it might have upon his longevity in office.

When Mr. Anderson concluded President Taft arose, smiling, and said that Mr. Anderson "did not need to pass out any taffy to insure his continuance in office." The remark was taken as a promise that Mr. Anderson should hold his job, and was greeted with great cheering.

"The feeling between the white race and the colored race in the South is growing better each year," declared President Taft in his address. "I don't care if there are extremists who differ from me. They do not represent the real white feeling in the South."

DEVERY LEARNING BUSINESS.

Says Rockaway Merchants Expect to Make a House a Year from Him.

William S. Devery, the "best Chief of Police New York City ever had," is being sued by William A. Duncan, a feed merchant of Far Rockaway, for $195.71. Duncan says he sold that amount of feed to Devery for his horses and chickens.

"Let's see the order, properly made out and signed," said Devery.

No orders were forthcoming and so Devery declined to pay. Duncan engaged Congressman Willetts to bring suit in the Municipal Court in Jamaica. The case came up yesterday, but was adjourned because a witness was missing. After Judge Kadlen had dismissed the jury Devery was surrounded by an admiring throng.

"When I moved to Far Rockaway I didn't know anything about business," Devery said. "Why, man dear, a business man in Far Rockaway who doesn't make a new house out of me each year is looked down upon."

BOTTLE THROWN AT UMPIRE O'LOUGHLIN

He and Umpire Kerin Hooted and Hissed by Crowd in American League Park.

ELBERFELD IS BANISHED

Sent to Clubhouse for Disputing Decision—Yanks Blow Up and Naps Win, 10 to 4.

Chicago manners, mixed with the monitory methods of ancient Rome, were introduced in New York yesterday afternoon by Westerners or other suburbanites who slipped into American League Park unnoticed among 7,000 real New Yorkers. They took the form of bottle-throwing. True, only one bottle was thrown and it didn't hit anybody, but it was the little rift within the lute that ultimately breaks down the band wagon. The bottle was aimed at Silk O'Loughlin because he banished Elberfeld from the field for protesting too gymnastically a decision at third base that made Ball safe on a play most of the spectators thought retired the runner. The Kid gesticulated in his usual way when expostulating with O'Loughlin, and Silk took umbrage—always a dangerous thing to take with Norman. Almost all the fans cheered Elberfeld as he marched off the field, and many of them hissed and hooted O'Loughlin. It was when Norman was near the clubhouse gate that the bottle was hurled. The missile came from the grand stand behind third base. Silk was nettled by the attack, but he kept his temper, even though hundreds of onlookers nagged him through the rest of the game.

O'Loughlin had a partner in unpopularity. Kerin, who umpired behind the bat, was condemned bitterly for calling Engle out on strikes in the fourth inning, when the Yankees had a run in, a man on third and none out. Other decisions by Kerin were criticised in a way that betrayed feeling deeper than the discontent common to fans when the home team is losing. The decisions on Ball and Engle, reversed, might have meant a different result. Stallings's men played pluckily until Elberfeld was sent to the clubhouse. Battery errors and a brace of bingles gave Cleveland three runs in the fourth, but in the same round the Toupers began cutting down the lead and, though the visitors tallied twice in the sixth, the seventh found, and left the locals for the second time only one run behind. But after O'Loughlin's ruling in the eighth, the Hilltop outfit went to pieces and the Naps swelled their total from five to ten, whereas the Stallingsiten couldn't score again.

For three chapters, save for a slip by Laporte that didn't cost anything, it was as good a game as anybody could wish to see. Only one man on each side got to second and none reached third. But Brockett went to the bad in the fourth. Four balls and a wide pitch placed Bradley on second, Turner singled and the Human Kangaroo hopped home on Lajoie's sacrifice fly. Turner stole third and he and Hinchman, who made first via the easy route and got to second on Ball's sacrifice, galloped in on Easterly's bingle to right centre.

Elberfeld delighted the rooters by singling through short and stealing handily. He made third on a thistledown bunt by Chase. Then the Kid chalked and Hal got third on a wild pitch. Enthusiasm was seething, for it seemed probable the Yanks would tie, but Umpire Kerin called a strikeout on Engle, and the next two men died easily. Brockett, though Goode doubled, Bradley sacrificed, and Turner and Lajoie trudged, held the Naps runless in the fifth. In the same round Kleinow opened with a fine two-bagger. Knight fouled out, but Honest Jack advanced on Brockett's death at first and came in on Hemphill's ripping two-sacker. A beautiful running stop by Ball robbed Elberfeld of a hit and sent the locals to the field with the score only 3 to 2 against them.

But Ball still was busy in the sixth, for he led off with a two-timer and came in on Easterly's single, the batter taking second on the throw-in. Easterly was run down by Knight, Laporte and Elberfeld between second and third on Lord's hop, the batsman perching on the choice and stealing second. Lord got third on Joss's out at first and counted when Knight's fumble roosted Goode, who promptly stole. Bradley's strikeout left the score Cleveland 5, New York 2.

Chase, however, started Gotham's sixth with a safety through third and came in on Engle's triple to the clubhouse gate. Claudius registered when Demmit died at first. Laporte was despoiled of a hit by Turner's grand left hand running stop, and Kleinow, though Terrible Terry's error gave him a base, died stealing.

And then the deluge. Ball began the eighth with his second double, and was called safe at third on Chase's choice in fielding Easterly's infield attempt. With the Kid clubhoused, Austin, who had supplanted Knight in short, took Elberfeld's place at third, Vaughn going to the midfield. Brockett lost his bearings and the Blues recorded five times on hits by Lord, Joss, Goode, Bradley, Turner, and Lajoie, coupled with loose fielding by the temporarily demoralized Yanks. From that time the batsmen were retired in one, two, three order. The score:

PIRATES BREAK TIE AND WIN IN ELEVENTH

Giants Downed When Camnitz Singles and Leach Hits Over Herzog's Head.

PITCHERS IN CLOSE BATTLE

New York Evens the Score in the Sixth —Both Teams Nervous, Amassing a Total of Eight Errors.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., June 18.—There was a hard baseball battle at Exposition Park this afternoon between Camnitz and Wiltse. The contest lasted eleven innings, when the Pittsburgs were returned winners over the Giants by the score of 3 to 2. The game was almost anything but a pretty one from a real baseball standpoint, as both teams seemed a trifle nervous, and under the strain some bad baseball was played. One side made five errors, the other three.

It was not until the last half of the fifth inning that any scoring was done. Then Pittsburg tallied twice. Devlin was unable to handle Wilson's smash, and after Gibson flew out Camnitz made his first hit of the season. Barbeau forced Wilson at the plate, but moved to second on the play, while Camnitz took third, from where they both scored on Leach's single.

In the sixth inning New York tied the score. Miller wabbled at a bad moment, giving Tenney first on what should have been an out, and then Camnitz hit Doyle with a pitched ball. Herzog walked, filling the bases, and there was a conference between Manager Clarke and the pitcher at this point, but it was finally ended by Camnitz remaining in the box. Murray hit a hard one to Miller, who, with the assistance of Wagner and Abstein, completed a double play on Herzog and Murray, but Tenney scored the first run for New York. O'Hara then rapped to left field, and the score was tied as Doyle came over. Leach here made a remarkable running catch of Devlin's smash.

From this time on it was a pitchers' battle. On different occasions the first man up would hit safe, but he was always kept from reaching home. In the eighth inning Tenney, first up, hit safe and went along on a sacrifice. Herzog flew out, and both Murray and O'Hara were intentionally walked by Camnitz and Devlin was thrown out.

Leach hit for three bases in Pittsburg's half of the eighth, but Clarke, Wagner, and Abstein behind him could do nothing. Wiltse struck out Clarke and Abstein, passed Wagner, and made Miller ground out.

After Gibson was out in the eleventh Camnitz hit safe, and scored when Leach hit over Herzog's head for what would have been a home run had it been needed. The score:

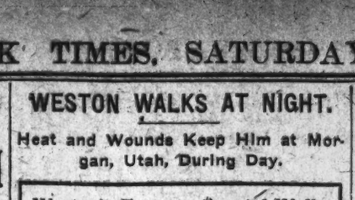
Special to The New York Times.

MORGAN, Utah, via Ogden, Utah, June 18.—The two wounds that I received Wednesday night by a fall, and the intense heat in this mountainous district, compelled me to stop at Morgan, Utah, twenty-three miles from Ogden, and for the same reason I am waiting until 6



Weston's Route Through Utah.
Remained at Morgan until 6 P. M., expecting to reach Ogden by midnight.

P. M. for my start to Ogden, where I expect to arrive at midnight.

I have not, however, been idle, as I am making arrangements for my walk to San Francisco via the Southern Pacific Railroad route. The officials have kindly consented to give me every assistance so that I may have proper care and sufficient nourishment to get me safely over the desert. This assurance has caused me great joy, and has been the best bit of encouragement since leaving Kansas, and relieved me of a great deal of worry. This off my mind, the rest looks easy.

CURTISS AEROPLANE FLIES.

Two Successful Half-Mile Trials at Morris Park Last Evening.

Late last evening, after the wind had died down, Glenn H. Curtiss took his aeroplane out at the Morris Park track and made two successful trial flights of half a mile each. Mr. Curtiss has been making some alterations of the machine and its motor in an effort to make it fly slower. With the assistance of A. M. Herring a half mile was measured off on the track.

At the first attempt the machine arose gracefully after skimming along the ground for ninety-nine yards, and covered the measured half-mile distance at the rate of twenty-six miles an hour.

Mr. Curtiss then fixed his motor for faster speed for purposes of comparison, skimmed along the ground for 75 yards this time, then covered the half mile in fine style at the rate of 46.7 miles an hour.

There was not a hitch in the control or operation of the machine, and although it was so dark that the aeroplane could scarcely be seen a few yards away Mr. Curtiss landed both times with perfect ease.

Mr. Curtiss planned to try for a more ambitious flight early this morning should the wind prove satisfactory.

Motor Boat Insep Arrives.

William C. Proctor's motor boat Insep, the third boat that started last Monday from Bermuda for the return race to this city for the cup given by the Crescent Athletic Club, arrived at Bay Ridge yesterday afternoon at 3:08:45 o'clock. Capt. McCarty, who commanded her, said he met with rough weather coming up the coast the preceding day and he also had serious engine trouble, water getting into the gasoline, which prevented the boat from making good time. The Insep will go to Greenport to-day, where she was built, and will be thoroughly overhauled. The winning boat, J. G. N. Whitaker's Ilys, which beat Richmond Levering's Heather by 1 hour 22 minutes and 44 seconds, went to Bayonne yesterday, and in a few days will start for Philadelphia. The Heather, which is a duplicate of the Insep, will also go to Greenport for overhauling before being formally delivered to her owner, whose home is in Cincinnati.

MATSON TRIUMPHS IN 232.74-MILE RACE

After Monsen Finishes Third at Crown Point Course Other Contestants Are Flagged Off Track.

CROWN POINT, Ind., June 18.—First honors in the opening of the "Western Vanderbilt" automobile races to-day went to Joseph Matson, who piloted a Chalmers-Detroit "Blue Bird" to a brilliant victory over fifteen rivals. The race was for light cars only, and, while of great importance in itself, was generally considered as preliminary to the race of the big cars for the Cobe Cup over the same course to-morrow. Perfect weather and the absence of any save the most trivial injuries to drivers were fortunate circumstances attending the winning of the Indiana trophy by Matson. The field numbered sixteen cars at the start, the Ford and Renault having withdrawn.

Chalmers-Detroit, (Matson)	4:31:21
Locomobile, (Robertson)	4:39:03
Marion, (Monsen)	4:42:03

The time of the other cars was not taken, as they were flagged off the course after the first three had finished. Following is the record of the Matson car:

Lap.	Time.	Pos.	Lap.	Time.	Pos.
1	29:00	10	6	26:26	2
2	25:43	5	7	27:05	1
3	25:41	1	8	30:21	1
4	26:05	2	9	28:01	1
5	25:50	1	10	26:59	1

One lap, 23.27 miles. Total distance, 232.74 miles.

Burman in a Buick led at the end of the first lap, covering the distance in 23:41—the fastest lap of the race. Burman also led at the end of the second lap in 49:46. Knipper in a Chalmers-Detroit led at the end of the fourth lap in 1:46:27—two seconds faster than Matson's time.

When it became apparent, as the initial race in the two days' contest drew to a finish, that the victory lay between Matson, Robertson, and Monsen, the affair increased in dramatic intensity.

The race, which was an hour late in starting, owing to the belated arrival of the auto trucks for the transportation of the militiamen to their station around the course, got finally under way when Starter Frank Wagner slapped Maisonville, the Corbin driver, on the back, and the machine shot across the line. The remaining cars were dispatched at minute intervals.

Burman, driving a Buick, was the early hero. He covered the first lap in 23:41, the fastest time for one circuit registered during the entire race. His excellent work continued on the second round, as he led the field past the grand stand in 49:46. His triumph was short-lived, however, as he met with difficulties on the third lap, but completed it in good time. He was put out of the running on the fourth lap by the loss of a valve. After making futile efforts to repair the damaged part, he finally voluntarily disqualified himself by borrowing a valve and coming into the grand stand, where he left the course.

The Fal-Car, driven by Ruehl, had the distinction of making the slowest lap of the day. As the other cars reeled off lap after lap the Fal-Car was among the missing, but it finally hobbled into port, having made the circuit in 3 hours and 40 minutes. Then Ruehl retired from view.

The second lap brought about the downfall of Louis Strang, who was admittedly the favorite driver before the race. He covered the first lap in fine shape in 24:32 3-5, but halfway around on the second he was put out of the contest by the sudden necessity for using his brake. He had pursued a car for several miles, and, thinking he was about to have an opportunity to pass, he turned loose with his best speed. He had not room to go by, however, and to avoid crashing into the car ahead he applied the brake so suddenly that his transmission gear was stripped from the rear axle. Burman brought Strang back on the rear of his machine.

The fourth lap saw Chevrolet, the lone Buick survivor, but ill-fortune appeared to follow the Buick entries, for he, too, was forced out of the race by an accident shortly after leaving the grand stand. His apparatus went wrong, and after vainly endeavoring to rectify it he left the course.

In the meantime, Matson, who finished the first lap in an apparently hopeless position, was steadily forging to the front. At the end of the second round he had advanced to fifth place in point of elapsed time. He registered his best time on the third lap, covering the distance in 25:43, and this timely spurt placed him in first position. He was closely pressed by his Chalmers-Detroit teammates, Knipper and Poole. Hardly a minute separated the three cars.

Matson was forced to relinquish his lead for a brief period at the end of the fourth lap, when Knipper forged ahead by the scant margin of two seconds, with Poole a close third. From this time on Matson was never in danger, as he steadily increased his lead until at one time he was eight minutes ahead of the field. His car ran with precision, and he was able to continue on the track without stopping until the end of the eighth lap, when he halted at the repair pit to replenish his supply of oil, water, and gasoline. The excellent work of Frank Vaughan, his mechanician, at this stage, reduced the loss of time to a trifle more than half a minute.

Matson's teammates were unable to maintain the terrific pace. Knipper dropped out of the race at the end of the fifth lap, and Poole encountered many difficulties in his sixth round, which occupied fifty minutes. He continued on the track, but was hopelessly in the ruck after the fifth lap.

The half-way mark of the race saw the Stoddard-Dayton, driven by Wright, and the Corbin, guided by Maisonville, far in the rear. The two cars continued until the finish, but they were at all times two or three laps behind the leaders. Stutz, in a Marion, made a desperate race, and was well up when he blew out a cylinder, just north of the grand stand, during the eighth lap. His car ran into the shallow ditch at the side of the track, but he and his machinist escaped with a few bruises. He had little chance to win even had there been no accident, as he was about a half hour behind the leader.

Wells, in a Moon, and Wiseman, at the steering post of a Stoddard-Dayton, struggled earnestly along, but were not able to secure a commanding position, although they lingered on the course to the finish.

The interest in the last lap centred in the race for second place between Robertson in his Locomobile and Monsen, at the wheel of a Marion. Interest was augmented by the danger, never absent in an automobile contest, of the breaking of the machinery which would have put Matson out of his well-earned place and have given first honors to either Robertson or Monsen. Robertson drove with experienced coolness and was well up at all times. In the early stages he was never better than fifth, but after the half-way mark was reached he moved up to third position, and he snatched second place from Monsen in a terrific battle on the last lap. Robertson stopped only once at the repair pit, and his lightning work and that of his mechanician in refilling his tanks brought a round of applause.

The men in the various pits worked swiftly, and as a rule with the briefest possible delay, although in one or two instances ill-advised haste led to the promiscuous spilling of oil or the dropping of a can from a racer and a stoppage until it could be recaptured. These incidents served to amuse the crowd and compensate it in a measure for the long delay at the start.

To-morrow's race will, it is said, be the most severe test of machines and drivers in the history of stock-car racing in America. Twelve cars—two Locomobiles, two Appersons, three Buicks, two Stoddard-Daytons, two Knoxes, and a Fiat—are entered. The cars are of 40 or 45 horse power. The race is 17 laps, 395.59 miles, or nearly 100 miles longer than the Vanderbilt Cup course on Long Island.

THE HUNDRED DOWN TO A SECRET SEVEN

THE NAMES ARE WITHHELD

Isaac A. Hopper Joins In His New Role of Reforming Tammany from the Outside.

The Committee of One Hundred held its initial meeting yesterday afternoon at 82 Beaver Street with Gustav H. Schwab presiding—it was said for the last time. Like Robert C. Ogden, who was Chairman of the Committee of Nineteen, Mr. Schwab will retire from the Chairmanship after permanent organization has been effected.

This will probably be done at a meeting called for next Thursday afternoon, when reports are to be received from a Committee of Seven appointed for the purpose of nominating permanent officers, and an Executive Committee of Twenty-one in which the members of the Nominating Committee are to be included. This committee, appointed at the meeting yesterday, was also instructed to bring in some sort of a resolution dealing broadly with plan and scope.

Sixty-five of the 100 members attended the meeting yesterday afternoon. It was said that of the other thirty-five, twenty were out of town, where the notices of the meeting could not reach them. There was some speechmaking, but harmony prevailed. Among those attending was Isaac A. Hopper, former Tammany leader of the Thirty-first Assembly District. Mr. Hopper exhibited just a slight trace of stage fright as he appeared for the first time in the rôle of reformer. He was chaffed good-naturedly by his colleagues in reference to the statement made on Thursday by "Little Tim" that Hopper's mission should be to convert his ninety-nine confrères to the true Tammany faith. Mr. Hopper made a speech in which he made it perfectly clear where he stood.

"For seven years," said the former Tammany district leader, "I have been trying to reform Tammany Hall from the inside. I'll try to do it from the outside now. I think Tammany needs conversion a heap more than do my ninety-nine confrères on this committee.

Cautioned by Chairman Schwab, W. I. Willis, who was elected temporary secretary of the Committee of One Hundred, refused to divulge who had been appointed on the Committee of Seven. It was learned, however, that Raymond V. Ingersoll had been appointed on it and probably would be its Chairman, and that Michael J. Fitzgerald, formerly of the Letter Carriers' Union, was another member.

Mr. Ingersoll, after the meeting had adjourned, said that among the matters to be decided by the Committe of Seven was whether to recommend the establishment of district organizations or borough organization, or whether the Committee of One Hundred should go ahead and educate the voters without any organization whatever.

"It is not likely the question of fusion will come up for a month, at least," said Mr. Ingersoll. "The first step will be to frame the issues, of which there will be a good many besides economy, honesty, and business methods in the city administration. I believe that we should frame a constructive programme which our candidates should be required to pledge themselves to. We are going to stay in the fight until after the ballots are counted, and not, as has been suggested, retire after the nominations have been made. We are going to do all in our power to have the candidates indorsed by us elected."

It was said that the Committee of Seven would recommend some business man for the Chairmanship of the Committee of One Hundred.

BAR DOUBLE-DECK STAGES.

Court Upholds Law Keeping Them Off Riverside Drive.

Fifth Avenue double-deck stages must not travel on parkways or over bridges in city parks when forbidden by the Commissioners of Parks, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court decided yesterday, in upholding the city park ordinance adopted last January prohibiting any vehicle measuring over 10 feet in height from running along the driveways of any park or parkways under the jurisdiction of the Park Department. It was contended that vehicles higher than 10 feet injure the trees.

Eugene Shellenberg, an employe of the Fifth Avenue Coach Company, was convicted in Special Sessions for violating this ordinance by driving one of the double-deck coaches of the company, 11 feet in height, over a bridge in Riverside Drive. He appealed, and yesterday's decision was against him.

FRAUD CHARGE IN LAND DEAL.

Bar Association Seeking to Disbar Lawyer Joseph Flannery.

Charges made against Joseph A. Flannery, a lawyer, before the Bar Association, growing out of the sale to the city of real estate at Hunt's Point, the Bronx, were argued yesterday in the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, and his disbarment was asked for.

It is charged by the Bar Association that Flannery, as counsel for the Last Bay Land and Improvement Company, induced his clients to sell the land proposed to be condemned to his clerk, Leon Rains, for about $85,953, and then sold it to the city for $247,053. The Bar Association contends that Flannery did not disclose to his clients that he was the purchaser and that he kept all of the proceeds except $85,953. The city turned the property into a public bathing place.

Counsel for Flannery entered a general denial of any wrongdoing, stating that the transaction was a speculative one and that the land company was glad to sell the property for $85,953.

GETS SIX CENTS DAMAGES.

Manufacturer Wins Suit Against Man Who Locked Him In.

A verdict for 6 cents was returned by a jury in Justice Gerard's part of the Supreme Court yesterday in favor of Abraham Gallinger, a bronze manufacturer of 265 West Broadway, in his suit to recover $2,535 damages from Frederick Dost, a silk manufacturer at the same address, whom, he alleged, imprisoned him in the building "with intent to humiliate and disgrace him."

Counsel for the plaintiff said that Dost, wishing to get the loft rented by Gallinger, locked the door of the building, thus forcing Gallinger to telephone the police. Upon their arrival the imprisoned man crawled out on the fire escape, down the ladder to its end, and then jumped into a net held by policemen. Gallinger alleged that he received personal injuries in his adventure in addition to mental pain.

Japanese Festival for Charity.

A Cherry Blossom Matsuri, as the Japanese festival in aid of St. Andrew's Church of Richmond, S. I., has been called, will be held next Thursday, Friday, and Saturday on the grounds of Edward R. Stettinius's home adjoining the Richmond County Country Club, at Dongan Hills. About 200 young men and women will take part in the pageants and dances.

INSURED FOR MISS SINCLAIR.

Woman Suing Laird for Breach of Promise Says Policy Was in Her Name.

Questions about the life insurance policy that, it is alleged, Samuel S. Laird, Jr., had made in favor of Miss Cora Sinclair, who is now suing him for $50,000 damages for breach of promise of marriage, was one of the principal points brought up in the trial of the action now going on before Supreme Court Justice Amend and the jury yesterday.

The policy was originally made payable to the defendant's brother, George S. Laird. Then it was changed and made payable to "Cora Sinclair, sister," and subsequently made to read, "Cora Sinclair, fiancée." Miss Sinclair on the stand said that she did not know that the policy was to be made out to her previous to the time that Laird brought it to their apartment.

Some days ago, in his testimony, Laird said that he and a young man friend of his agreed to take the apartment for the Sinclair sisters, and that each of them was to pay one-half the rent. He further testified that, in addition to this, he gave Cora Sinclair $15 a week for food. On the stand yesterday Miss Sinclair denied any such agreement.

Two colored witnesses, Evelyn Thomas and Emma Black, were called, and the point was brought out that Rosa Gary, who testified yesterday for the defense, had declared that she was to be paid $10 a day for being a witness.

WHIPPED MAN SHE IS SUING.

Miss Hyams Charges Lefkowitz with Breach of Promise.

After giving a public thrashing with a horsewhip to the man she is suing for $10,000 damages for breach of promise, Miss Julie Hyams, 18 years old, appeared in the Second Criminal Court in Newark yesterday morning to make a charge of assault and battery against him. Charles Lefkowitz of 15 Hillside Place, Newark, was the man who received the whipping. When Judge Hahn refused to take the complaint, the man was attacked just outside of the court door by Miss Hyams's mother, Mrs. Ernestine Hyams.

Miss Hyams attacked Lefkowitz in Clinton Street, one of the business thoroughfares of Newark, and it was while defending himself that Miss Hyams alleges he gave her grounds for the assault charges. After leaving the court Mrs. Hyams was restrained from again attacking the man by court officers.

Lefkowitz, who is President of the Essex Realty Exchange and Secretary of the Newark Box and Lumber Company, as well as one of the organizers of the Riverside Supply and Manufacturing Company, met Miss Hyams a year ago last Spring, and in the following June became engaged to her. Miss Hyams said yesterday that the wedding was to have occurred six months ago, but that her fiancé met another girl that he liked better and refused to keep his promise.

HEINZE TRIALS NEXT FALL.

Postponed by Agreement — Lawyer Robinson Will Be Tried Next Week.

Unless pending demurrers are sustained Sanford Robinson, long attorney for F. A. Heinze and Arthur P. Heinze, the brother of the copper man, will be tried before Judge Ray, in the United States Circuit Court, next Wednesday morning, on charges of obstructing the administration of justice and interfering with a Federal process server. The indictment was returned as a result of the disappearance of fifteen books of the United Copper Company, needed by United States Attorney Wise, in his inquiry into the doings of F. A. Heinze in the Mercantile National Bank and the disappearance of Tracy Buckingham, formerly transfer agent of the United Copper Company, who returned recently from Canada and told Mr. Wise all he knew.

Another indictment charges Robinson and A. P. Heinze, along with F. A. Heinze, Carlos Warfield, a friend of Heinze's, who came on from Butte to help him, and Calvin O. Geer, a clerk in A. P. Heinze's office, with a conspiracy to put the books out of the way, to mutilate some of them, and to send Buckingham off to Canada. This indictment will not be tried until next Fall, according to the understanding reached yesterday.

CROKER RESIGN? NOT HE.

The Fire Chief Puts a Quick Quietus on Rumors That He Will.

When Fire Chief Edward Croker read in yesterday's newspapers about the rumors that he was about to retire, having completed twenty-five years of service in the department, he first expressed himself plainly about the foolishness of firemen who would believe such a thing. Then he issued a statement about it. Here it is:

"I have no intention whatever of retiring. I am feeling better than ever before, and I am more interested in the work. This report is just a continuation of the rumors which have been flying about for the last eight years. When I get ready to resign I will let the press know."

Reporters asked the Chief about the subscription being raised by members of the department for a testimonial to him after twenty-five years' service.

"I have stopped any testimonial or dinner," he said. "I have always been opposed to that sort of thing, and I won't stand for it."

Rooney Tells Court He's Guilty of Arson—Says His "Head Isn't Right."

Daniel Rooney, 35 years old, surprised Judge Dike, in the County Court, Brooklyn, yesterday, by confessing that he was a pyromaniac and pleading guilty to an indictment charging him with setting fire to his own premises, at 69 Taylor Street.

The building is a four-story brick house, containing five families, including about twenty children. It was set on fire twice in six hours on the night of June 3. Rooney was arrested and indicted for arson.

"Do you realize what you are doing? Are you aware that the court can sentence you for forty years for this crime?" asked Judge Dike when Rooney pleaded guilty.

"I do," said Rooney. "But I have had bad spells, and when I have them my head is not right."

The prisoner was remanded back to jail to await sentence on Monday.

REJECT 'THE BRIDAL MORNING'

Pittsburg Art Committee Decides Not to Buy Disputed Picture.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., June 18.—Pittsburgers opposed to the nude in art have won another victory. "The Bridal Morning" will not be hung on the walls of the Carnegie art gallery permanently, but will be shipped back to its owner, George Sauter of London, at the end of this month.

The decision of the Art Committee to turn back the picture which so incensed Pittsburg was made known to-day, when it was announced that four more pictures had been purchased for the permanent collection, and the list given did not include "The Bridal Morning." It was also admitted that no more pictures would be purchased. The pictures to-day bought are the "Portrait of Mrs. C.," by William M. Chase of New York; "November Hills," (third prize winner,) by Bruce Crane of New York; "Spring Morning," by Childe Hassam of New York, and "Munich Boy," by J. Frank Currier.

Members' Games at Pastime A. C.

The Pastime Athletic Club will hold its June set of members' games at Pastime Oval this afternoon with a programme which calls for seven events. In the past it has been customary to hold these games on the first Sunday of every month, but owing to the interference of the police recently it was necessary to change the date to this afternoon. One of the best races scheduled is in the 220-yard low hurdle event, in which both Roy Dorland and Goggins will be on scratch. Each has shown marked ability in clearing the sticks, and qualified in the championships in this event. The other events, in which practically all of the club athletes are entered, are the 70-yard dash, novice; 150-yard rust handicap; 600-yard run, handicap; three-quarter-mile walk, handicap; one-and-a-half-mile run, handicap, and 12-pound shotput, handicap.

CHILDREN SWAMP SAENGERBUND STAGE

5,000 Turn Up for Rehearsal, 2,000 of Whom Overflow Into the Auditorium.

THEIR CONCERT TO-MORROW

Saengerfest Opens To-night with Concert by City's United Singers and Songs by Soloists.

It will be difficult to distinguish singers from auditors at the Children's Concert of the Saengerbund at Madison Square Garden to-morrow afternoon. A rehearsal of these children, all from the public schools, was called yesterday afternon, and when the children had filled all the seats in the Garden it was the problem how to squeeze them all upon the improvised stage. So there may be more singers than listeners on Sunday.

The stage has been built at the east end of the Garden, and will accommodate 3,000. Some 5,000 children turned up yesterday. Dr. Frank R. Rix, Supervisor of Music in the public schools, explained it in this way:

"We rehearsed a great many more than were required because it was feared that some of the children would drop out. Not one of them has done so, however. They're all here this afternoon, every single one of them."

So the afternoon, which should have been spent in rehearsing the music for Sunday, was spent in marching and countermarching and an attempt to compress the children into the narrow spaces. And in the end it was found necessary to cancel the sale of two whole sections of seats in order to give room enough for the children. The real singing rehearsal will take place to-day.

In spite of the lack of singing, however, there was plenty of noise yesterday. The boys and girls, divided into sections according to schools and voices, refreshed their vocal chords by giving the various class yells. When Albert S. Caswell, another Supervisor of Music in the schools, appeared, the hall resounded with cheers which augured well for the volume of sound to-morrow afternoon.

The cheering once commenced, it was continued at any slight pretext. A line of police officers was favored with applause at one time. But the climax of the afternoon's excitement was reached when a very pretty little girl in white and red mounted the conductor's box and led a large section to cry:

"Oo-ee, Washington Irving, oo-ee!"

The matter looked simple in the beginning. When the school children arrived, at about 2 o'clock, they were led, section by section, to the platform by their chaperoning teachers, but when it was found that the platform completely filled left half the children still standing on the floor of the vast building the problem became more complicated.

Then it was that the marching and countermarching commenced, and two or three people nearly lost their wits in the business of assorting the children. A man with a megaphone called out the sections which were to advance to the platform, and all went well until it was discovered that the Seventeenth District was missing. After an interval these children were found concealed in one of the hallways.

It was nearly 5 o'clock when all the children were seated on the platform, and the new sections which they filled assumed the appearance of a vast beehive. One hundred and fifty schools in Manhattan and the Bronx were represented.

To-morrow afternoon will be the first time that the music department of the public schools has had a chance to show in public what it has done and can do, so the occasion will assume a double interest.

The first concert of the Saengerfest will be given to-night, when the United Singers of the City of New York will form a chorus. The soloists will be Corinne Rider-Kelsey and Claude Cunningham. Julius Lorenz and Carl Hein will be the conductors.

At the Children's Concert to-morrow the children's voices will be under the direction of Frank R. Rix, Albert S. Caswell, and the orchestral leader, Dr. Felix Jaeger. The soloists will be Mrs. Rider-Kelsey and Daniel Beddoe.

The children on this occasion will sing "Be Not Afraid," from "The Elijah"; Beethoven's "The Heavens Proclaim," Tottman's "Heilig," Handel's "Sound an Alarm," from "Judas Maccabaeus," and Nicolao's "Hymn of Joy and Praise."

The programme will end with "The Star-Spangled Banner."

DELEGATES SEE PROSPERITY.

Finley H. McAdoo Elected President of Credit Men's Association.

PHILADELPHIA, June 18.—Prosperous business conditions in all parts of the country was the opinion expressed by delegates from every section at to-day's session of the convention of the National Association of Credit Men. To-day was the last session of the convention and its feature was discussion of business conditions, each speaker's time being limited to three minutes. S. G. Rossen of Baltimore and Ira D. Kingsbury of Rochester addressed the convention.

Rebels Driven Into Mountains—Turks Seeking Pacific Settlement.

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 18.—The reports of a recent battle at Djakovitch, Northern Albania, between 10,000 Albanians and twelve battalions of Turkish troops have been confirmed. It appears that the Albanians rebelled against the new régime and refused to obey the local Governors or to pay taxes. Djavid Pasha, military commander at Uskub, was ordered to suppress the rebellion and enforce compliance with the Government's orders.

The first encounter was in favor of the Albanians, but afterward Djavid Pasha, reinforced by artillery, bombarded and destroyed the Albanian villages and compelled the rebels to take refuge in the mountains. Some of the tribes continue guerrilla warfare. It is reported that the Government, fearing the insurrection will become general, has ordered Djavid Pasha to suspend hostilities and endeavor to reach a pacific settlement of the trouble by negotiations.

STROKE SARGENT DROPPED.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW LONDON, Conn., June 18.—One of the greatest surprises ever sprung upon the followers of Harvard's oarsmen around the camp at Red Top was the one that occurred about 6 o'clock this evening when Roger Cutler took Sargent's seat at stroke in the 'Varsity boat.

After the excellent time made by the crew last night, 20:55, equaling Yale's best trial upstream, it was supposed Harvard's crew was definitely settled upon.

Coach Wray followed the eight down stream in the launch and started them over the upper two miles of the course against a strong head wind and with the tide. The waves washed over the bow of the shell to such an extent that the crew was nearly swamped when the boat returned to the float. Sargent was an interested spectator from the launch while the crew he had stroked for several months pulled up the course.

The Harvard 'Varsity oarsmen have been rowing an exceptionally clever oar since they arrived from Cambridge, and it is hinted in camp that the crew is "on edge" and Coach Wray is trying hard to keep them in condition until the race is pulled off with Yale on July 1.

Yale's freshman eight also had a shake-up this evening, Capt. Baker being moved from No. 5 to No. 3, and Kerr was sent back to No. 4 oar. Smith was advanced to the freshman eight, taking Baker's seat at No. 3. Yale's 'Varsity and freshman eights had a lively scrap over the first mile this evening, rowing down stream, and the 'Varsity boat was a winner by two boat lengths.

WISCONSIN ON HUDSON.

Western Collegians Arrive at Poughkeepsie to Prepare for Regatta.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., June 18.—The Wisconsin navy arrived at noon to-day in their private car, and immediately set to work unloading their two shells and launch. All the oarsmen are well.

Coach Ten Eyck was busy getting the shells into shape most of the afternoon, and soon after 5 o'clock both crews were on the river. The weather was cold for the season, the water rough, and the crews did some splashing in their two-mile go. Ten Eyck, when asked what he thought of his chances, said: "We've come here with the best we've got, and we're going to row the best we know how. If we get beat, why, we can't help it."

Four of last year's 'Varsity, two freshmen, one of last year's 'Varsity substitutes, and a new man who never rowed before make the eight. Neither the 'Varsity nor the freshman crew has raced this season. There are twenty-five in the party, which is stopping at The Elms, near Highland.

The Cornell 'Varsity, the freshmen, and the four, went up the river shortly before 5 o'clock this evening and rowed over the course. Coming down with the wind, some attempts at speed were made, but no figures were given out.

Columbia came down as far as the bridge with her crews, and for the first time the three colleges now here were on the river at the same time.

BLOCK ISLAND YACHT RACES.

Fifty Boats to Start In New York A. C.'s Annual Event.

Fifty boats, the majority of them owned by Long Island Sound yachtsmen, will start this morning from Whortleberry Island in the annual race to Block Island, which is the big yachting feature of the year of the New York Athletic Club. Commodore H. A. Jackson, Jr., who has practically managed the event for the last few years, has succeeded in getting together a larger entry list this season than ever before, and a grand contest is looked for.

The race is open to all decked or cabin yachts in cruising trim of less than 32 feet on the water line. The race is sailed under regular time allowances. The scratch boats are the sloops Notos, owned by O. K. Benson, and the Duchess, owned by Dr. J. B. Palmer. The little 28-foot sloop Bole, owned by J. E. Ridder, receives the highest allowance, 3 hours and 42 minutes. The race will start at 11 o'clock, and the committee boat Indian will leave Travers Island one hour earlier for the starting line. The distance is 100 nautical miles.

At 5 o'clock in the afternoon, from the same place, the New York Athletic Club's second annual power boat race will be started. This event is open to cruising boats of from 25 to 40 feet, and about a dozen boats are expected to start. The finish of both races will be in West Harbor, Block Island.

Torrance, Jr., 6—3, 5—7, 6—1.

HORSES AND HORSEMEN.

A selected shipment of thoroughbred yearlings from J. B. Haggin's Elmendorf Stud, in Kentucky, will sail for England on the Atlantic Transport Line steamer Minnehaha today. The horses number about fifty, to be sold at auction. The greater portion of the Elmendorf Farm's yearlings of this season will be sold in New York.

Harry Payne Whitney has decided to make a further reduction of his racing establishment in America, Mr. Whitney's racing interests now being centred in his stable in England, trained by A. J. Joyner. The horses left in New York are trained in several different stables, and consignments from the several lots will be offered at auction by the Fasig-Tipton Company on Saturday, June 26, the sale being expected to practically close out Mr. Whitney's racing here for the season.

The entries for the Brooklyn Jockey Club's popular private sweepstakes, the Astoria, for fillies two years old, eight subscribers, include most of the turfmen who have supported the race since it was instituted. The Astoria, which had a late closing this season, will be run Monday.

Horsemen have not yet settled on the best two-year-old of 1909, but an offer of $10,000, declined by Woodford Clay for Ocean Bound, by Star Shoot-Flying Ship, and a winner at Belmont Park, indicates Ocean Bound as the best of the fillies.

Thomas Clyde has made nominations to late closing stakes which promise the re-entry to racing of the popular Goughacres Stable, the nominations made by Mr. Clyde including a subscription to the Saratoga Special, the great sporting sweepstakes of the Saratoga meeting, the Clyde entries for the Special including the first of the produce of the establishment's stout horse Bryn Mawr.

The National Steeplechase and Hunt Association has announced the cancellation of the certificate as a gentleman rider granted to Cortlandt H. Smith, well known as a successful amateur jockey, and in the same ruling has made announcement that the licenses of C. H. Douglas, as trainer, and F. Williams, as jockey, are withheld until payment of fees has been made.

In The Sunday Times to-morrow there will be a capital article telling what becomes of the graduates of the girls' colleges of the country. Another feature, with striking illustrations, will describe and portray the Government's great 600-foot tower of concrete for wireless telegraphy. There will be a timely and illuminating article on the West as a Summer resort, with some rather surprising information about the number of thousands who are going West.—Adv.

MAYOR GOING DEEPER INTO DUFFY'S CASE

Has Ordered His Confidential Investigator, Inspector Kelly, to Make a Further Inquiry.

CONFERENCE AT CITY HALL

The Inspector Once Held the Police Command in the District In Which Duffy Lives.

The much-mooted Duffy police persecution case, brought up by Supreme Court Justice Gaynor of Brooklyn, took a new turn yesterday with the hasty summoning to the Mayor's office of Inspector Thomas Kelly of Queens County, and several of the members of his staff. Neither the Mayor nor Kelly would say just what significance should be placed upon the interview, but it is generally understood that Kelly has been instructed to conduct a thorough investigation of the case on behalf of the Mayor.

The Inspector called at the Mayor's office several times during the day and was with him for some time on each occasion. It was intimated that the Mayor, after making a personal investigation, had decided that there is something wrong with the testimony of the various policemen whom he has had before him, and that he desires to have his suspicions verified.

Every one naturally asked why Kelly was chosen by the Mayor as his confidential investigator. It was learned that the Mayor is in all probability much more familiar with the details of the case than was generally supposed. It was remembered that soon after he was promoted to captaincy Kelly was detailed to the Gates Avenue Station in Brooklyn. The Mayor was asked if Duffy did not live in this precinct. In replying he drew a diagram of the streets in the vicinity of the young man's home and clearly showed that he is personally very familiar with the locality. It is understood that he has gone all over the ground himself, but he would not confirm the impression.

Commissioner Bingham would not talk of the case during the day, except to confirm the announcement that Inspector Kelly had been sent to the Mayor's office at the request of the latter.

Kelly is one of the most intelligent and popular of the younger police executives. He is a personal friend of Charles F. Murphy, and has been looked upon at times as more or less of a protege of the Tammany leader. He knows the Mayor equally well and has his thorough respect and confidence. Several years ago, when he was a Detective Sergeant, he was assigned to the Mayor's office. Last year he was in charge of the Coney Island inspection district, and during the Sunday closing agitation several weeks ago was temporarily transferred to the district as an additional police executive. It is believed that he was selected for this detail at the personal request of Mayor McClellan.

The Mayor intimated yesterday that the new phase of the case could be taken as meaning that he will not be ready to give his final decision in the case until next week at the earliest. He had declared that the announcement of the final result of the investigation could be expected to-day.

Mayor McClellan surprised Brooklyn Police Headquarters by appearing there unexpectedly late yesterday afternoon. The Mayor was accompanied by Assistant Corporation Counsel Crowell, who is assigned to his office, and is aiding him in his investigation. The two remained about half an hour at Headquarters. They were received by Acting Captain August Kuhne of the local Detective Bureau, who is facing a thirty-day term in jail for photographing Frank Jenkins, the banker, for the Rogues' Gallery, in disobedience to a Supreme Court order.

The Mayor and Mr. Crowell were taken upstairs by Capt. Kuhne to the room where prisoners are photographed and measured according to the Bertillon system for the department records. The Mayor went carefully over the ground of the photographing of young Duffy. He asked many questions, and Capt. Kuhne and other officials present explained fully the working of the system.

After leaving Brooklyn Police Headquarters, the Mayor and Mr. Crowell motored to Coney Island, reaching there about 4 o'clock. They picked up Capt. Palmer of the Coney Island Police Station, and the three spent about two hours looking over Surf Avenue and the Bowery.

That the Mayor's visit had to do with the future attitude of the police on the matter of Sunday shows on the island was not doubted by the proprietors of amusement resorts who saw Mr. McClellan on his rounds, but neither he, Mr. Crowell, nor Capt. Palmer would discuss the purpose of the visit.

The Mayor left his automobile in Surf Avenue, and thereby nearly caused the arrest of his chauffeur, for the car was stopped close to a fire plug. Presently, Mounted Policeman Lynch came along and ordered the chauffeur to move.

"I guess you don't know whose car this is," said the man. "It's the Mayor's car."

"That doesn't make any difference to me," responded Lynch. "Move or be pinched."

The chauffeur moved, so the Mayor went home in his car.

SCANNELL LOSES A POINT.

His Charges Against ex-Supt. Collins Held to be Irrelevant and Scandalous.

James G. Collins, formerly Superintendent of the Bureau of Highways in Manhattan, who was removed Jan. 1, 1904, by Borough President Ahearn, won a point yesterday in the Appellate Division in his legal fight for reinstatement. Following his removal George F. Scannell was appointed Superintendent of Highways, and both the latter and Ahearn are made party defendants in his appeal to recover his lost position.

In the answer filed by Scannell, opposing Collins's application for a writ of mandamus, he made this charge against Collins:

> The said relator procured and permitted a person of whose name the defendant Scannell is not certain, but who is, as he is informed and believes, a brother-in-law of the relator, to work or pretend to work as a payer under the name of Charles Comisky from April, 1902, to January, 1904, and to draw pay from the city. On or about Nov. 20, 1902, he procured and permitted a person of whose name the defendant is not certain, but who is, as he is informed and believes, one George Oliver, the Secretary of a political club of which the relator was the head, to be appointed as a watchman under the name of Thomas McNulty.

A number of similar allegations were made by Scannell, who also charged that these allegations were appointments in violation of the civil service list. It is also charged that a fund held as security for badges has never been accounted for by Collins.

It is these charges which Collins objects to in Scannell's answer as irrelevant and scandalous. The Appellate Division, by a divided court, grants his request. In his dissenting opinion Justice Scott says:

> In my opinion, the allegations of the answer should be allowed to remain in, and, if they are sustained, that the court should not lend its official sanction to the reimposition upon the public service of a person proven to be unfit to serve it.

TOM SHARKEY'S LOST A DOG.

Advertises in The Times for Cocker Spaniel That "Slipped Its Moorings."

Tom Sharkey, the former pugilist, is trying THE TIMES Lost Column this morning to recover a two-year-old black cocker spaniel, the gift of a friend. He had the dog for a few weeks only. He became much attached to the animal, which he missed on Thursday morning from its kennel in his stable at his place at East Twenty-fifth Street and Voorhees Avenue, Sheepshead Bay.

A search for the dog was unproductive and yesterday Mr. Sharkey bethought himself of the Lost Column and inserted an advertisement last night.

"The dog slipped its moorings and got adrift," said Sharkey. "It's all the fault of my stable boy, who tied the dog with a 'granny' knot instead of a regular half-hitch."

"AL" ADAMS'S WIDOW WINS $30,000 SUIT

Though Mrs. Gilbert Testified That Some of the Debt Was for "Hunting Up the Adams Boys."

Supreme Court Justice Davis dismissed yesterday the suit brought against Mrs. Isabella Victoria Adams, widow of "Al" Adams, formerly known as the "policy king," by Mrs. Marguerite Gilbert, an alleged palmist and clairvoyant, who sought to recover $30,000 on a note given her by the defendant, which specifically provided that the time of payment should be after the death of Mrs. Adams. It was on this ground that the Justice dismissed the suit.

Mrs. Adams, in her defense, alleged that Mrs. Gilbert told her that she was possessed of "supernatural powers," that there were "impending dangers" threatening the Adams family, especially the children, but that if $30,000 was forthcoming in the form of a note, which she would not try to collect during the lifetime of Mrs. Adams, but look to her estate for payment, the "impending dangers" could be warded off.

Upon these conditions, Mrs. Adams said, she made the note, which she subsequently sought vainly to have returned to her, alleging that the plaintiff had been amply repaid for any services in sums ranging from $20 to $1,500, the last amount on two different occasions.

According to Mrs. Gilbert's story, the note was given for "services rendered," which included nursing both Mrs. Adams and her daughter, cooking for the family, engaging servants, hunting up the Adams boys when they were out late nights, and especially for inducing "Al" Adams, who had for ten years before his death been estranged from his family, to make a will in favor of his wife and appoint her executrix.

She denied having ever told Mrs. Adams that she could "protect" her or her children from danger, and also denied that she had ever represented herself to be a clairvoyant with "supernatural powers."

Court Rejects Libel Justification Plea.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court handed down an opinion yesterday in the suit of Col. W. D. Mann of Town Topics against The New York World, sustaining the plaintiff's demurrer to the defendant's answer pleading justification. Col. Mann sued for $50,000 damages, basing the complaint upon an article under the headlines "Great Names Forged in Feats and Fancies." The court holds that the justification is not as broad as the charge contained in these headlines.

Mayor Woodhull's Portrait Damaged.

The Sunday Times To-morrow

A FULL PAGE will be given, in the Picture Section of The Sunday Times, to the presentation of Sir John Collier's remarkable painting, "Sentence of Death." It is a picture portraying one of the little tragedies of everyday life—a medical specialist passing sentence upon a youth just entering early manhood. The painting, executed with a fine, sympathetic touch, makes a strong appeal. "Sentence of Death" is from the brush of the same artist who painted "A Forced Marriage," which was recently reproduced in The Sunday Times. In addition to this unusual feature the Picture Section to-morrow will contain a great number of attractive and timely photographs. One page will carry pictures of the West Point graduation, and another page pictures of the exercises at Vassar. Then there will be pictures of attractive women well known in New York society; pictures of the long-distance balloon contest; photographs of the Meadow Brook polo team in its successes abroad; a remarkable photograph of the battleship Michigan making twenty knots an hour; photographs of the new home of the American Embassy in Berlin, and many other entertaining photographs.

Features of the Magazine

"The capital city has a different aspect from that which it had a few years ago. Brass buttons and epaulettes are filling the eye." Justice Brewer of the Supreme Court has many interesting things to say in a notable article in the Magazine Section of The Times to-morrow. It is an article whose reading will repay every reader. The great significance of the meeting of the Kaiser and the Czar will be skillfully analyzed by "A Veteran Diplomat." Another feature of The Sunday Times to-morrow will tell of the graduates of the colleges for girls in after life. From London there will be entertaining descriptions of what is going on in stage affairs over there—plays and players of great interest. Thomas L. Masson will contribute an enjoyable satire on New York life, and there will be another of the "Letters of a Japanese Schoolboy." The proposed great six-hundred-foot tower of concrete for use of the Navy in wireless telegraphy—and what it will mean—will be described, with striking illustration. The School for Diplomats—the new idea in Washington—will be the subject of another article. Winthrop Ames on the New Theatre, Margaret Anglin on Experiences in Australia, Weston's great walk across the continent, just what Mr. Loeb is doing as Collector of the Port of New York, the thousands who are this year going to discover what is "Out West"—these and many other articles will go into the making of an uncommonly interesting magazine.

The Sunday Times Should Always be Ordered in Advance of the Day of Publication

SHARP DROP IN TRADING

Record June Bank Clearings — Cash Gain Foreshadowed by Week's Currency Movements.

The character of yesterday's stock market was determined by the nature of the trading on the previous day. It was a matter of general comment at the close of Thursday's session that the general reaction had been accentuated and particular stocks forced down sharply by means of professional selling, and, inasmuch as traders who resort to such tactics do so without any real convictions and are, therefore, quick to cover their positions, rallies almost invariably follow their operations. Recoveries yesterday ran to a point or so in a limited number of the more conspicuous shares, but for the most part the gains were confined to negligible fractions. This fact, together with the very small business of the day, amounting to less than half that of Thursday, proved simply that the entire market was reflecting nothing more than conditions prevailing within the four walls of the Stock Exchange. Of specific news bearing upon financial markets there was very little, but in a general way the soundness of the business situation was testified to by further excellent railroad earning statements and reports of the placing of heavy orders with manufacturing concerns, as well as by the usual weekly tabulation of bank clearings throughout the country, compiled by the mercantile agencies and disclosing for the week increases of 64 per cent. over the exchanges of the same week of last year, of nearly 20 per cent. over 1906, and for June thus far a daily average larger than anything yet recorded for that month. On grain markets wheat prices fell again and substantially. Crop reports compiled by various railroads, including the Rock Island, were extremely encouraging, as were also those published during the day by recognized grain trade papers.

In the money market the point of interest continues to be the movement in the foreign exchanege market, which, however, failed again to result in any actual arrangement for gold shipments. Preliminary estimates of the currency movements of the week indicate very heavy gains in cash by the local banks, receipts from the interior having surpassed those of last week. So far as reserves are concerned, to-day's statement will again turn upon the loan item, and here the financing which has been under way is not unlikely to result in an expansion which will minimize the cash showing.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Too Late for the "Sale."

After the stock market has begun to recover from depression there are always crowds of people who suddenly discover that stocks were "cheap" at the bottom prices reached, and show great courage in buying, or at least putting in orders to buy—at about the lowest level reached on the decline. Yesterday was no exception to the rule, and commission houses had plenty of orders for execution, only most of them were not executed for the very good reason that they were too far under the market. "If these people want to get stocks at bargains," remarked one broker, "they had better get around on bargain day. About 80 per cent. of them wait until the 'sale' is over, coming around the day after and expecting still to pick up stuff at marked-down prices." There was suspicion on the part of many brokers that if the market had not shown such a prompt recovering tendency, possibly they would not have had such a large number of customers apparently anxious to buy stocks yesterday. The fact that a large percentage of these same would-be buyers did not want stocks badly enough to bring their bid up to current quotations was also held to have some significance.

What Will Bank Loans Show?

According to reports current among the traders, the recent break in prices called forth strong support in the shape of large buying from both of the two big Wall Street banking groups. These stories, of course, do not exactly coincide with the reports of heavy profit taking by different individuals identified with one party or the other, but it is probable that the loan changes to be disclosed in to-day's bank statement will be scanned with unusual interest. Of course, a big increase or decrease in loans on the part of a single bank may mean something, and may mean nothing, concerning the attitude of the institution and of its largest customers toward the stock market. It is conceivable that outside transactions having nothing whatever to do with the stock market proper might cause a big increase in loans, but if to-day's statement reveals such in the case of certain institutions, Wall Street will draw its own conclusions marketwise.

Strength in Tractions.

The decision of the Court of Appeals in the Interborough Rapid Transit Company franchise tax case in favor of the corporation, it was thought in certain quarters, had a good deal to do with the exceptional strength which developed in the Interborough-Metropolitan shares. It may well have been of some influence on the stocks, but if reports coming from high quarters are to be believed, the campaign in Interborough-Metropolitan was planned long before Wall Street had any intimation of this franchise tax decision. While the information forthcoming as to causes why Interborough-Metropolitan shares should advance is very meagre, just enough is allowed to leak out to appeal to the imagination, and incidentally whet the speculative appetite. Certain gentlemen affiliated with the property returned to New York yesterday morning from a Western trip. The rise in the stocks, coincident with their return, may have been purely a matter of chance. There is one curious thing about the Interborough-Metropolitan stocks, which is that they are apt to develop extraordinary strength when the rest of the market is inclined toward weakness. During this week's slump, they held their ground better than any other shares in the list.

Work of Outsiders.

An impression is gaining ground that some of the old-time speculative following of American Sugar Refining has transferred its allegiance to American Beet Sugar. For three or four years the former has been retired to the inactive group, while the latter has come to be one of the most spectacular performers on the Exchange. Yesterday the stock rose about 2 points, to 44¼. There are some persons of an unusually optimistic turn of mind who predict that within two or three years more American Beet Sugar common will be established on a 6 or 7 per cent. dividend basis, and sell above par. One thing seems quite apparent, however, and that is that the speculation which is going on in the stock is being conducted without the assistance of and probably with the disapproval of the real insiders. Information coming from that quarter could hardly be construed as bullish, but frequently a pool of rank outsiders is able to do what it pleases with a stock, irrespective of the attitude of others. Another similar case is found in Corn Products Refining Company, the speculation in which is frowned upon by the controlling interests.

Atchison and Central Rumors.

Particular attention was directed toward Atchison and New York Central, and in both cases the rumor mills got busy in an effort to turn out a plausible explanation for the strength of the stocks, but succeeded in evolving nothing startlingly new. In connection with the rise in New York Central the talk of a dividend increase was supplemented by revamped stories of the formation of a holding company to take over the Vanderbilt lines, with the added intimation that in some way or other this would be linked up more closely with the Harriman system. The strength of Atchison was more or less associated with the prospects of an increase in the dividend to 6 per cent., though some asserted, with a great show of mystery, that more than a possible dividend increase was back of the rise in the stock. Coming down to particulars, the information thereon was delightfully vague.

CHICAGO STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, June 18.—Street's Stable Car was the active feature of the local market and the price advanced 1¾ points before midday. Sears-Roebuck shares yielded some, as did American Can preferred and Booth Fisheries common. In the late trading Biscuit preferred receded 1½, to 123½. Fisheries closed at 15¾, but the preferred showed a net advance of ½, to 50.

A CONSPIRACY ALLEGED

Injunction Prohibits Stock Exchange Firm from Closing Out Account of a "Little Board" Member.

The first move by the Consolidated Stock Exchange to test the recent ruling of the Stock Exchange, that members of the latter institution must transact no business for active Consolidated members, came yesterday when Charles A. Towne and Benjamin F. Spellman, attorneys for Marcus Heim, a member of the Consolidated Exchange, obtained an injunction from Justice William J. Kelly in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, restraining the big board firm of Albert Loeb & Co. from closing out the account of their client. An order was also issued by the court calling upon the Treasurer and Governing Committee of the big board to show cause on June 23 why the resolution adopted by that body on May 19 last, seeking to prevent its members from doing business with members of the "Little Board," should not be declared illegal and an injunction issued preventing its enforcement.

Officially, the Consolidated Exchange is in no way connected with Mr. Heim's test suit, but the members of the Consolidated as individuals will follow it with keen interest. Mr. Heim is one of the oldest members of the Consolidated, having offices at 32 Broadway, and is a man of large means, with substantial interests in many corporations. It was said for him last night that he meant to carry the case through to the end, no matter how much money or time it involved.

Since the ruling of the Stock Exchange was announced relations existing between Consolidated and Stock Exchange houses for many years, covering investment transactions in bonds and investment issues not dealt in on the Consolidated, have been perforce severed, and complaint against the ruling has been nearly as general among the members of the Big Board as among the minor Exchange members.

Mr. Heim, in his suit, alleges that this rule is discriminative and that it has established a complete boycott of which he and his fellow-members of the Consolidated Stock Exchange are unjustly made victims. The complaint recites that the New York Stock Exchange offers the only means available for trading in certain stocks for which no market exists on the Consolidated Stock Exchange, and that the denial of the privilege so to trade is the result of a conspiracy which if allowed to continue would work irreparable in jury to the complainant. The specific damages alleged to have been sustained through the refusal of the Stock Exchange firm of Albert Loeb & Co. to continue the account of the complainant are placed at $7,000.

On behalf of the Stock Exchange it was said last night that no official action had been had as yet on Mr. Heim's suit, but that it would undoubtedly be fought vigorously, as the ruling was considered essential to the proper conduct of the exchange

FREIGHT RATE WAR RENEWED.

Another Cut in Both Class and Commodity Rates Announced.

The import freight-rate war of the Eastern railroads has broken out afresh. It was learned yesterday that at Friday's meeting of the Import Committee of the Trunk Line Association further cuts of 3 cents per hundred pounds in class freight and 1 cent per hundred in commodity freights were made to take effect Aug. 1.

This is the third reduction in class rates and the fifth in commodity rates since the beginning of the rate war last September.

The first-class rate from Boston was originally 70 cents, as against the present rate of 61 cents charged by the Boston & Maine Railroad. The Baltimore rate was 67 cents, and the schedule soon to go into effect will reduce the rate at that point to 58 cents, with corresponding cuts at this port, Philadelphia, and other seaports.

Boston & Albany Bond Issue Approved.

ALBANY, June 18.—The Public Service Commission announced to-day that it has authorized the Boston & Albany Railroad Company to issue $4,500,000 of twenty-five-year 4 per cent. improvement bonds to provide for additions and betterments upon its property. Of this amount $68,850 is to be used in the State of New York. The commission has authorized the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Company to guarantee the payment of the bonds.

THE EUROPEAN MARKETS.

Money Supply Exceeds Demand in London—Paris Prices Steady.

LONDON, June 18.—The supply of money exceeded the demand on the market to-day, and discounts were easy in sympathy.

Trading on the Stock Exchange developed a more cheerful tendency on some repurchases, but the improvement was not pronounced, and the final prices were irregular. Consols benefited by cheap money. Copper shares rallied with the metal, but the close was unsettled. Kaffirs recovered their opening setback on Paris buying, and the finish was steady. Diamond shares were weak.

American securities opened at a decline of ⅛ to ½ a point. Later prices improved on light buying, and at noon the market was steady, with values from ⅛ below to ½ above yesterday's New York closing. Covering operations caused a further hardening, but New York sold in the afternoon and prices drooped, then rallied, and after irregular fluctuations closed uncertain.

Money, ¾@1 per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 1¾@1 13-16 per cent.; for three months' bills, 1¾@ 1 13-16 per cent.

PARIS, June 18.—Prices on the Bourse to-day were steady.

At closing 3 per cent. rentes were 97f 42½c for the account.

Exchange on London, 25f 20c for checks.

BERLIN, June 18.—Trading on the Boerse to-day was dull and prices generally were lower. Iron shares rose on American reports. American railroad securities also moved upward.

RECORD FREIGHT TRAIN HAUL.

Pennsylvania Engine Draws Loaded Train Two-thirds of a Mile Long.

A record achievement in the movement of a heavy freight train has been accomplished on the Pennsylvania Railroad between Altoona and Enola, near Harrisburg, Penn. To determine what could be done in actual road service, 85 steel gondola cars, loaded with a total of 4,451 tons of coal, were attached to a freight engine of improved type.

The total weight of the train was 6,151 tons, and its length nearly three-fifths of a mile. The run of approximately 124 miles was made in 7 hours and 15 minutes, the average speed being about 17 miles per hour.

The company had made a number of road tests previously, but this performance surpassed all others.

Formerly it was necessary to have a "pusher," or extra locomotive, help long freight trains over the heavy grades. Now it is possible for single locomotives unaided to accomplish these record results.

HILL OFF ON FISHING TRIP

Party of Financiers and Railroad Men Go with Him on Canadian Outing.

James J. Hill left for Montreal last evening on his annual Canadian fishing trip. He will leave Montreal this morning for the St. John's River on his yacht Wacoutah. His party will include George F. Baker, Samuel Thorne, L. W. Hill, President George B. Harris of the Burlington, and Dr. George D. Stewart.

They will be gone about three weeks, all of which time Mr. Hill at least will devote to fishing. He is so fond of salmon fishing that he has made these trips every Summer for a number of years. It is usually told of the members of the party when they return that Mr. Hill was the most assiduous fisher of them all.

NO PROFIT TO HARRIMAN.

Official Statement of the Terms of Transfer of the Georgia Central.

This statement regarding the terms upon which the Central of Georgia was taken over by the Illinois Central was made yesterday by Vice President A. G. Hackstaff of the latter road:

The capital stock of the Central of Georgia Railway was acquired by Mr. E. H. Harriman in the year 1907 in the interest of this company, and was carried by him through the panic until this time. It has recently been taken over by the company from Mr. Harriman at the exact price paid by him, with an adjustment of interest, in other words, the company has made Mr. Harriman whole on the transaction with no profit to him whatever.

GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

WHEAT.—Aside from further talk about possible floods in the Missouri Valley yesterday, the news was mainly bearish. It was reported that larger country offerings of new wheat had been made, mainly for July-August shipment, although some of it was promised in Chicago by July 20. Liverpool had a firmer opening, but closed only ½@¾d net higher. Primary receipts amounted to 247,000 bushels, compared with 210,000 bushels a year ago. An official estimate placed the wheat crop of Hungary at 124,000,000, compared with 152,000,000 last year. Exporters bought 16 loads, mainly forward shipment, and cash wheat in New York closed: No. 2 red, $1.50 for old, in elevator and free on board, afloat, both nominal; new was quoted $1.17⅝, free on board, afloat; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, $1.35⅝, and No. 2 hard, Winter, $1.33⅝, free on board, afloat, both nominal.

CORN.—Except for a little steadiness around the opening, the market was generally weak and lower yesterday on more favorable weather and crop news. Liverpool came ½d net higher. Cash corn in New York closed: No. 2, 84c, elevator, and 82c, free on board, afloat, nominal, both old; new corn, 66¼c, free on board, afloat, Winter shipment.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, June 18.—The dealings on the local Exchange to-day were again of an unconvincing character. Transactions in purely Philadelphia issues were limited to a few hundred shares. Lake Superior received some support below 23, and after an early dip, ruled around that figure until the last hour, when it was bid up to 24½. The traction stocks were a little stronger.

NO VAN NORDEN MERGER.

Minority Told That Carnegie Trust Bought Only as a Private Investment.

The minority committee of Van Norden Trust Company stockholders, of which John T. Terry is Chairman and John C. Tomlinson counsel, has received a reply from President Dickinson of the Carnegie Trust Company to the committee's inquiry of last Monday regarding the plans of the syndicate which recently purchased 70 per cent of the stock of the Van Norden Trust Company.

Mr. Dickinson, as the committee understands his letter, has taken the stand that this Van Norden Trust Company stock was purchased merely as a matter of private investment. There is nothing in Mr. Dickinson's reply to the committee, it is understood, which indicates that the syndicate now has any intention of carrying out the plan, which was formally announced at the time the purchase was made, of merging the Van Norden and the Carnegie Trust Companies. The minority committee has received assurance from the Banking Department that it will receive an opportunity to be heard in the event of an application being made to the Banking Department for permission to merge the Van Norden Trust Company with any other institution.

The Mercantile Trust Company, it is understood, will act as depository for the minority stock of the Van Norden Trust Company at the request of the Terry Committee. A representative of the committee said yesterday that already most of the minority stockholders had expressed a desire to deposit their stock with the committee.

OUR BANKERS BORROW ABROAD

Estimated at $75,000,000 on Securities of Roads Which May Be Merged.

During the last six weeks New York banking houses have borrowed about $75,000,000 abroad, according to an estimate made by the banking house of Knauth, Nachod & Kuhne. In a circular on the financial situation issued by these bankers they say:

Within the last six weeks upward of $75,000,000 has been borrowed in London and Paris by New York banking interests. These loans have been placed chiefly at London at terms which show a net cost which will probably average considerably below the prevailing quotations for such long-term accommodation in this market. Many of these loans have been secured by collateral pledged with the New York agents of the foreign lending institutions. But in the case of some large loans recently made, the underlying collateral has been actually shipped to the other side. These borrowings have been largely for the account of powerful interests engaged in buying up the securities of various roads that are likely to figure later on in important merger projects. The movement is nothing like as extensive as it was in 1906, and is being conducted on altogether different lines, since all the advances made are based on the pledge of high-grade collateral with very few unsecured "finance bills" figuring in the deal. Inasmuch as most of these loans mature during the Fall months, when our grain exports are being made, there will probably be little difficulty in effecting payment when the readjustment has to be financed.

Foreign loans of this kind are customarily made by New York bankers in the Spring and Summer, the bills drawn in connection with these loans being paid off when the country's exports assume large volume in the Fall months.

TRADE CONDITIONS.

In its weekly review of general business conditions Dun's Review says:

The advance recently made in industrial activity and business confidence is fully maintained. The daily reports are of new buildings, new bridges, new rails, new cars, new locomotives, new works of improvement, new enterprises requiring courage, capital, labor, and materials. From the leading cities come advices of wider wholesale and retail distribution, larger employment of labor, additional work for contractors and builders, increased demand for manufacturing materials, satisfactory advance Fall sales.

The record of bank clearings is remarkable, in that it shows gains at New York of 88.7 per cent. over last year and of 23.0 per cent. over 1906, while outside of New York, where speculative transactions do not swell the total, the increases are 21.6 per cent. over 1908

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Silk Worms and Cocoons Are Admitted Free of Duty—Coverings Dutiable.

The principle was enunciated yesterday by the Board of United States General Appraisers that while silk worms and silk cocoons may be entered free of duty for purposes of exhibition, the frames surrounding them must stand duty, according to the component of chief value. The importer in the case is Frank Frost.

It is stated that the case was submitted to the Board without testimony and further that the article in question was not before the Board. General Appraiser Hay, who writes the decision for the Board, says that the silk worms and the cocoons are undoubtedly admitted to free entry, under the provision of the tariffff. The decision says that the same is true of any ordinary covering. It would appear from the Board's decision that sufficient evidence was not placed before the Board.

In giving his reasons for denying the claim for the free entry of the frames, General Appraiser Hay says that every covering in which a commodity is imported would not be entitled to free entry. General Appraiser Hay finds that the papers in the case do not warrant disturbing the Collector's assessment.

BRANDENBURG CASE TAKES A NEW TURN

THOUGH THE CUTTING FITS

As to the Stenographers, Says Counsel, They Were Merely Copying a Copy of the Real Article, Then Elsewhere.

The defense of Broughton Brandenburg to the charge of larceny in the second degree in the sale to THE TIMES of the article signed "Grover Cleveland" developed yesterday before Justice Fitzgerald, in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court, and it came as a complete surprise. A battle of handwriting experts had been expected, and the People had provided themselves with David N. Carvalho and George Pengelly to swear that the defendant himself had written the Cleveland signature to the article. They had also subpoenaed intimate friends of the late President to say that he, at any rate, had never written it.

All these preparations were made unnecessary by the admission by Brandenburg's counsel that he was willing to stipulate that the signature produced was not genuine, but that he also contended that it was not the signature which had appeared at the foot of the article when Brandenburg left it at THE TIMES office. To offset this, Mr. Nott directed Mr. Pengelly to place the article and the signature cut therefrom side by side before the jury, to show how accurately the two pieces of paper fitted together. As far as any one could see, the coincidence was complete.

With regard to the evidence of Miss Bacon and her assistant as to the typing of the Cleveland article in the Marbridge Building about Aug. 10, Lawyer Bell Thomas announced that he intended to show that at this time the original article was in the hands of The Broadway Magazine and that Brandenburg was only having a copy made.

The defendant was on the stand for a few minutes at the end of the session, but had not time to do more than describe his own qualifications as a writer. Before the People closed, Mr. Nott swore Clerk Penny of the Supreme Court to bring out the facts of the defendant's jumping his bail last February, and also managed to get into the record his arrest in San Francisco. On the other hand, the defense argued that his return from the West was voluntary, as he had waived extradition.

Typewriting and Signature.

The first witness of the day was Harrington J. Humphrey, manager for L. C. Smith & Brothers, typewriter manufacturers. He qualified as an expert, and then swore that the article sold to THE TIMES had been written on a Smith machine. Moreover, he stated that he had experimented with the machine lent to Miss Bacon last Summer, and was positive that the article had been written on that particular machine.

W. C. Reick of THE NEW YORK TIMES followed Mr. Humphrey on the stand. Examined by Mr. Nott, Mr. Reick told of conferring with Mr. Lincoln, the Sunday editor, about the Cleveland article some time before its publication. He was then asked particularly about the signature appended to it.

Q.—How did the signature come into your possession? A.—I received it from Mr. Lincoln.

Q.—What did you do with it? A.—I put it into my desk.

Q.—Did you, from time to time, examine it with other people? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—To whom did you give it? A.—I gave it to Mr. Jerome.

Q.—Was it then under glass? A.—No, Sir.

Mr. Reick stated that he had absolute authority to accept and pay for articles, and he authorized Mr. Lincoln to take the Cleveland article.

Q.—After seeing the article did you cause an investigation of its authenticity? A.—I did.

Q.—And it was after this investigation that you accepted it? A.—Yes.

Q.—When you authorised the acceptance of the article did you rely on the genuineness of the signature? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you accept the article in the belief that it had been written by Mr. Cleveland. A.—Yes; well, that it had been dictated by Mr. Cleveland. Mr. Brandenburg admitted that he had made interpolations in the article, but that the main body had been written by Mr. Cleveland.

Mr. Reick told briefly of conferences he had had with the defendant, and of the visits to THE TIMES office of Mrs. Cleveland and Mr. Hastings and Mr. Gilder.

"Some doubt," he said, "had been raised about the article by Col. Watterson or some one else, and Mr. Brandenburg came to my office. He said that if the article was questioned he could produce proof that some persons had seen the original manuscript and he could produce them."

"Did he tell the circumstances under which the article had been written?" asked Mr. Nott.

"He said he had been present in the Madison Avenue office and had seen Mr. Cleveland sign the article."

"Did he ever produce any one who had seen the original manuscript?"

"No," answered Mr. Reick.

Defense Shows Its Hand.

Mr. Jacoby then cross-examined. He began by bringing out once more that the defendant had made interpolations in the article, but that the defendant had asserted that Mr. Cleveland had finally signed it, and then turned to the circumstances which attended its acceptance by THE TIMES. Concerning these Mr. Reick testified:

"When Mr. Lincoln brought the article to me I said that we could not accept an article of this kind from any one without attempting to verify it."

He assented to the reasons Mr. Jacoby suggested for caution, the eminence of the reputed author, the fact that he was dead, and the bearing the article might have on the political campaign. Then the question of the signature was brought up. Mr. Reick had stated that he had glanced at it while it was still on the last page as he skimmed through the article.

Q.—Had you an impression of the appearance of Mr. Cleveland's signature? A.—At that time only a very vague one.

Q.—You didn't examine it carefully at that time? A.—No.

Q.—Is the only reason that you say the signature in the glass case is the same one that it appears to fit in? A.—No; I had it in my possession for a long time, and examined it carefully on a great many different occasions.

Q.—The next time you saw it was it out off the article? A.—No; I saw it after Mr. Ybarra brought it back from Mr. Hastings, and before he was sent I took the article up to the editorial council, and Mr. Miller and I went over it there. We examined the entire article and the signature. The signature was only important on the question of authenticity.

Mr. Reick could not remember whether he examined the signature again when Ybarra brought back Mr. Hastings's letter of Aug. 21, but said he did after the receipt of Mr. Hastings's letter of Aug. 20, containing other signatures for comparison.

This brought Mr. Nott to his feet with the objection that, as evidently the object of this line of cross-examination was to establish the reliance of THE TIMES on its own investigation, he would point out that on Aug. 24, before Mr. Hastings's second letter had been received, the defendant had received an advance of $100, the acceptance of which in itself constituted the crime.

New Signature Theory.

He was overruled and Mr. Reick went on to say that for several days Mr. Lincoln had the signature, now cut from the article, in his custody, and that when it was handed to him, Mr. Reick, he put it in an envelope in a drawer in his desk, kept for matters of importance.

Q.—You know positively that this signature is the same as is now in the glass case? A.—I will swear to it.

Q.—Is your reason for saying it is the same as the one on the article because it fits in and because you have confidence in Mr. Lincoln? A.—No, I do not rely on that.

Q.—You have no private mark of identification, have you? A.—No, but at the time of my interview with Mr. Miller we noticed the extraordinary dash at the end of the signature, which Mr. Miller said he did not believe was the usual Cleveland signature. We were remarking on it for at least a quarter of an hour.

Q.—That doesn't say that some one might not have made an extraordinary dash in copying it? A.—Oh, no; you asked me how I identified it.

Mr. Reick said that the signature was never out of his possession until it was finally handed over to Mr. Jerome, except for its examination in his presence by Mrs. Cleveland, Mr. Gilder, Dr. Finley, Mr. Carlisle, and Dr. Bryant. He described his office in the Times Building, and said that it was always locked when he was not in it himself. Pressed still further by Mr. Jacoby, Mr. Reick swore positively that the signature in evidence at the trial was the same that he had received from Mr. Lincoln.

Then the question of the article itself was taken up, and especially the return of the copy by Mr. Brandenburg after Mr. Lincoln had handed it back to him. The witness said:

"I asked Mr. Brandenburg myself to give the article back. It was at least a week after the publication. I had him telephoned for, and told him that I wanted to have the manuscript in my possession as long as its genuineness was questioned."

"Did he know at that time," asked Mr. Jacoby, "that legal proceedings were contemplated?"

"I think not," said the witness. "I did not know at the time."

Doubts Over the Article.

The view that had been taken of the article by THE TIMES before its acceptance was next considered.

Q.—In your conference with Mr. Miller did you not consider whether the style and sentiments of the article indicated Mr. Cleveland as the author. A.—Yes, we did. Mr. Miller thought it had a very strange sound and was hardly like some of Mr. Cleveland's writings. That was one reason why we demanded proof of its genuineness.

Q.—Did not Mr. Miller's opinion apply rather to one or two paragraphs than to the whole body of it? A.—Yes, I presume that he thought most of it sounded like Mr. Cleveland.

Q.—Were those the paragraphs which referred to Mr. Taft and Mr. Bryan as candidates and to Mr. Hughes and his fight on gambling? A.—I do not remember the passages. It was rather the style and not the facts. His criticism was that there were passages not in the style in which Mr. Cleveland generally wrote.

Q.—However, Mr. Miller finally concluded in view of Mr. Hastings's letter that the article was all right? A.—Yes.

The court sustained an objection by Mr. Nott to further questioning along this line, and Mr. Jacoby then sought to induce the witness to say that he had not relied entirely on the statements made to him by Brandenburg.

"Did you not, in accepting the article, rely solely on the statement made to you by Mr. Hastings in his letter of Aug. 21?" he asked.

"No," said Mr. Reick. "I regarded it as a verification of what Mr. Brandenburg had represented. I assumed that his statement was entirely correct."

"There must have been reliance on Brandenburg," interposed Mr. Nott, "or you would never have sent to Mr. Hastings."

Q.—Did you rely on Mr. Brandenburg's statement sufficiently to authorize the purchase before Mr. Hastings had said it was all right? A.—No.

Q.—It was the Hastings letter which moved you to buy? A.—Yes.

Q.—Combined with Mr. Ybarra's report? A.—Yes.

Q.—Weren't your suspicions largely based on the fact that the article was completed on March 15 and not offered till Aug. 21? A.—Yes.

After a few questions bringing out that the defendant had first told Mr. Reick his full account of the origin of the article at the end of September, Mr. Reick was excused.

Stenographers Recalled.

Miss Bacon, the Marbridge Building typewriter, was recalled and her cross-examination was continued by Mr. Thomas. Her affidavit, made at the request of the detective, Dixon, was admitted, and she was examined on it without much result.

She reiterated her statement that the defendant told her he had prepared the article originally from notes given him by Mr. Cleveland, but she could not say what color the paper was from which he wrote at her desk, or how much of the article to copied was in long hand.

Madeline Feron, her assistant, followed her and corroborated her testimony about the defendant sitting at the table and writing sheets, which were brought to her to copy out. She also declared that the paper she used last August was similar to that used for the article sold to THE TIMES.

Richard Watson Gilder, editor of The Century Magazine, was called after Miss Feron had been let off with a very brief cross-examination. He stated that he had been a friend of Mr. Cleveland since 1887 and was well acquainted with his handwriting. The five checks and four letters already identified by Mrs. Cleveland were shown to him, and he declared that they were all in the handwriting of the late President. Then the supposed signature, inclosed in glass, was handed to him.

Defense's Surprise Revealed.

"Is this the handwriting of Mr. Cleveland?" asked Mr. Nott.

"It is not," replied Mr. Gilder, with decision.

A number of photographs exhibiting together the five signatures taken from checks and the alleged signature from the article were passed around to the jury. But then Mr. Jacoby sprang his surprise.

"I think it is due to the court," he said, "to say that we are not going to claim that the signature to the article is genuine."

"That's new to me," remarked Mr. Nott.

"We are not going to claim it," went on Mr. Jacoby, "because we could not, in the face of Mrs. Cleveland and Mr. Gilder, and because we do not know it is genuine."

This rather knocked the ground from under David N. Carvalho, the handwriting expert, who next mounted the stand, armed with a portfolio and prepared to give the jury a scientific discussion. However, he was also ready to testify that he could prove as an expert that the article was actually written with the same machine that had been in use in Miss Bacon's office for only one month last Summer.

Then a letter and envelope which the defendant had acknowledged as his own before the Grand Jury were shown to him. Comparing it with the signature on the article he said:

"The same hand wrote both of these."

Attack on Experts.

Mr. Jacoby made a fierce attack on him in cross-examination as the "semi-official expert of the District Attorney's office," and tried to discredit him with the jury by various questions about former trials in which he had been engaged. However, he could not shake his testimony that Brandenburg himself had written the signature to the article.

George Pengelly, auditor of the Capital City Bank of Columbus, Ohio, was also called as an expert, and gave similar testimony. He, too, was sure that the article had been written on Miss Bacon's machine, and that no one but the defendant had written Mr. Cleveland's signature at the end of the article.

Recess was taken, and after the court reconvened Mr. Jerome put in an appearance for a short time. Mr. Nott directed Mr. Pengelly to take the signature from its glass case and place it with the last page of the article on the rail of the jury box that the jurors might judge if it would fit.

Mr. Jacoby objected successfully to the witness's testifying to the accuracy of the join, and also prevented the witness from declaring as an expert on paper whether it would be possible to cut another piece to fit so snugly into place.

The cross-examination was directed to discrediting Mr. Pengelly, and it was brought out that he was receiving $50 a day for his attendance in court.

The People now sprang its surprise. William Penny, clerk of the court, was bidden to take the stand. Being sworn by the court he read from the official records how the defendant had forfeited his bail last February by failing to appear to answer to his present indictment.

Mr. Jacoby protested against this "dramatic proceeding," but could not prevent it, nor the testimony of Detective Sergeant Norman Fitzsimmons, who told of arresting Brandenburg in San Francisco. The detective told of a conversation with the defendant, in which he had said that he had left New York because he had not sufficient funds to employ counsel or handwriting experts, and that if he could he would have fled to Algiers.

Mr. Jacoby made a point of the return of the defendant without waiting for the completion of extradition proceedings, but Fitzsimmons would not acknowledge that Brandenburg had come back voluntarily, saying he had started to fight against that.

Defense Opens.

This closed the People's case. Mr. Jacoby unsuccessfully renewed his motion for the dismissal of the indictment on the ground that THE TIMES had not relied wholly on the statements of the defendant in buying the article, and that it was illegal to charge a man with attempt to commit grand larceny before a petit jury when the Grand Jury had not indicted him for it.

The court declared that the amount of the reliance of THE NEW YORK TIMES on Brandenburg's representations was a question for the jury. Mr. Bell Thomas addressed the jury for the defendant. He began by rehearsing the facts of Brandenburg's connection with Mr. Cleveland, and told how it was contended the article was prepared with the ex-President. He went on:

"Immediately after Mr. Cleveland's death the defendant saw he must market the article at once. He took it to The Herald in the early part of July and discussed it with them. We shall prove by two employes of the Broadway Magazine, one of whom copied it because Mr. Brandenburg wanted the original, that he then took it to them, and they kept it for three weeks.

"Then he went to THE NEW YORK TIMES, and we shall testify that Mr. Lincoln got both the original and a copy. I don't know what happened to the article, but we shall show you that the article shown to Mr. Hastings was not the original, but a copy.

"The evidence of the stenographers has no application, because they were only copying a copy from a copy. Mr. Brandenburg had got a copy wet on a boat and needed another. We shall prove that on Aug. 10 the original was in the Broadway Magazine office and a copy of it was made there. Another witness will show that the original article was in Mr. Brandenburg's possession early in July.

"As for the signature, we know that the signature given to THE TIMES was that of Mr. Cleveland. But when it passed from Mr. Brandenburg to THE TIMES we don't know what became of it. Mr. Brandenburg will testify that the signature produced is not the original one, and will tell you why. What became of the original I can't tell you, because I don't know."

The defendant was the first witness called in his own behalf. He had only time to testify to his career as a magazine writer and newspaper man. He related various chance meetings with Mr. Cleveland and was telling how he had written on one occasion to ask his views on the future of Mr. Roosevelt when the court adjourned till 10 o'clock on Monday morning.

CENTRAL CAN'T SHUT STATION

Utilities Board Restrains Bronx Property Owners' Fight on Road.

The Public Service Commission, by an opinion handed down yesterday by Commissioner Eustis, denied the application of the New York Central Railroad to close its 183d Street station on the Harlem Division. This was the station placed in the vicinity of land owned by a syndicate of which Senator Chauncey M. Depew, Chairman of the Board of the New York Central Railroad, was a member. The syndicate sold out to the Northern Improvement Company, which contributed $5,000 toward erecting the station, while other property holders put up $10,000.

The property holders told the Public Service Commission that the service granted by the Central at this station was so poor that few would use it. The road contended that it was necessary to close the station in order to accommodate through traffic. In commenting on the case Commissioner Eustis remarked that the Central appeared to have done everything in its power to drive passengers away from the station.

The commission yesterday, by a vote of 4 to 1, authorized the Spuyten Duyvil & Port Morris Railroad, which connects the Hudson River Division of the New York Central with the Harlem Division at Mott Haven, to make a new lease to the Central and to issue bonds to reimburse the Central for expenditures that it made on the connecting line.

The stock of the Spuyten Duyvil Road was, until very recently, owned by the Vanderbilt family, but it was bought by the Central soon after E. H. Harriman entered the Central's board.

ELECTION LAW IS UPHELD.

Signatures Must Be Put on Registration Books by City Voters.

ALBANY, June 18.—The law requiring a description and the signature of an elector presenting himself for registration in New York City was declared constitutional to-day by the Court of Appeals.

The decision was rendered in the case of Frank T. Ahern, who last Fall, in attempting to register in his district on Greenwich Avenue, Manhattan, refused to affix his signature to the public copy of the registry list, although he answered the questions put to him by the registration officials. The board refused to register him, and Ahern applied to the Supreme Court for a peremtory writ of mandamus to compel it to do so. The lower courts refused the writ and the Court of Appeals affirmed the decision.

The court points out in an opinion by Judge Weener that primaries and election in cities have to be hedged about by statutory provisions that are not deemed necessary in towns and villages, and that the Legislature acted within its authority in prescribing reasonable regulations designed to secure accurate information concerning the qualification of voters and some method of identification.

"This amendment to the election law is not a limitation upon the right of the elective franchise," says the court, "but a regulation designed to secure its free and untrammeled exercise."

POLICEMAN PUT OFF FORCE.

Court of Appeals Decides Against Foody—Wasserman Remains.

ALBANY, N. Y., June 18.—The Court of Appeals to-day sustained the dismissal of Lieut. Thomas F. Foody and the reduction to the grade of patrolman of Sergt. Joseph A. Wasserman by Police Commissioner Bingham of New York City.

The charges against Foody were disobeying orders, making false entries on the blotter, and making false statements to a superior officer. Wasserman was charged with conduct unbecoming an officer and being absent without leave.

ARVERNE RESIDENTS IN A SEWER FIGHT

FEAR HARM TO BEACH FRONT

Present Action Marks the Last Move In a Long Struggle to Drain Marshes Near Arverne.

Justice Garretson of the Supreme Court will hear argument this morning in Long Island City on an injunction obtained by William Scheer, a manufacturer of jewelry at 542 Fifth Avenue, and other residents of Arverne, to restrain the Sewer Commissioners from opening a connection between the Arverne trunk sewer and the mud flats that lie between what is known as the beach channel and the mainland. It is feared by the Arverne people that if the connection is made, sewage from the village will be floated in and redeposited along the water front close by the tracks of the Long Island Railroad and within a few hundred feet of several homes.

The present difficulty arises from the development of a real estate enterprise in what used to be a tide-water marsh between the mud flats and Arverne Bay. Beyond the marsh land two small islands rise above the mud flats, awash at low tide and covered when the tide is high. Outside of these islands runs what is known as the beach channel, where there is deep water. Originally there was a small creek, empty at low water, between the two little islands and the mainland, and another between them and the marsh land where the real estate enterprise was established.

Some years ago the Arverne residents had a channel dredged in the creek between the islands and the main land, and also dredged out a channel between the two islands and the swamp land leading out into the beach channel. Then a thirty-two-foot sewage canal was cut through the swamp land, connecting Arverne Bay with the channel between the islands and the swamp. Into this canal the trunk sewers of Arverne were emptied, and a four-miles-an-hour current set from the bay back through the swamp land and thence into the beach channel between the swamp land and the islands.

The arrangement was entirely satisfactory to the residents of Arverne, but not at all so to the Somerville realty people. They undertook to eliminate the sewage canal and for this purpose to close up the canal and put there a sewer leading from the bay on the one side into the channel between the swamp land and the islands on the other. Then the realty people dredged this channel to a depth of 30 feet and a width of 250 feet. The dredging changed entirely the conditions as to the set of the current that carried the sewage, and then the troubles of the Arverne residents began.

It appeared that the depth and width of the newly dredged area, instead of allowing for an automatic cleaning out of the sewage into the beach channel, created, on the ebb tide, a current in both directions, one toward the beach channel and the other toward the Arverne water front. Some time ago, as the result of protests, the connection between the sewer and the newly dredged channel was closed up and a new connection established underground far enough out toward the beach channel to insure having the sewage carried out into that and not back to the Arverne water front.

That seemed to be the end of the trouble, but the event proved otherwise. The sewers laid down by the real estate company did not work properly and many stoppages resulted. Negotiations were taken up with the city authorities to compel the real estate people to make repairs, and eventually $6,000 was obtained for this purpose. Instead of making the repairs, however, the real estate company has undertaken again to open the connection between the sewer and the shore end of the newly dredged channel, and eventually got the agreement of the Sewer Commissioners. At that point Mr. Scheer and his friends got the preliminary injunction, on which argument will be made to-morrow on the question of permanency. A big petition has also been circulated among Arverne residents to prevent the opposed connection from being made.

SAYS HE WAS A SECRET AGENT

Hallen Testifies Revolutionist Echesarreta Planned the Cartridge Swindle.

James D. Hallen, who is on trial before Judge Malone in General Sessions charged with having defrauded Ramon Echesarreta, a representative of the Nicaraguan Government out of $11,000, which was intrusted to him to buy cartridges for a Central American revolution, took the witness stand yesterday in his own defense.

Hallen's defense was that he was a secret agent of the Guatemalan Government, employed to frustrate the plans of Echesarreta and his companions, in their efforts to start a revolution in Central America.

In his testimony the defendant said that Echesarreta was the first to suggest that the boxes should be filled with copper waste instead of cartridges, in order that he might make money on the transaction. Hallen said that every cent he did not spend in the purchase, packing, and shipping of the boxes, was returned to Echesarreta.

Hallen will continue his testimony on Monday.

Wolcott House Destroyed by Fire.

WOLCOTT, Vt., June 18.—A fire to-day destroyed the Wolcott House, with the hotel stables and a three-story business building owned by S. A. Fife. The few guests at the hotel had no difficulty in escaping from the building, although some of them lost their personal effects. The loss is estimated at $40,000.

$120,000 Fire in Chicago.

CHICAGO, June 18.—An early morning fire in a six-story building here, occupied by the United States Furniture Company, caused a loss to building and contents estimated at $100,000. An adjoining building, occupied by the Imperial Campbell Branch Wall Paper Company, was damaged by water to the extent of $20,000.

BULLET MADE HIM HUNGRY.

Glanced Off the Waiter's Chest—Wife Who Fired Locked Up.

Elijah Clark, a waiter of 226 East Fifty-sixth Street, who has had a very hard time finding work of late, remarked last night, after his wife had fired a bullet point blank at his chest without inflicting more than a flesh wound:

"I guess my run of bad luck is over."

Delia Clark, the wife, went to Bridgeport for a visit some time ago, when her cousin, Adelia Hughes, came to board with another family in the house where the Clarks lived. She came back a couple of days ago very jealous of Adelia, and, according to the neighbors, began to drink heavily.

When her husband came in to supper last night she was angry with him. Going into the bedroom she soon returned and, going up to him, said:

"Will you kiss me?"

"No, go away," he said, pushing her back.

She went to the door, then suddenly raised a revolver, and fired. The shot missed. He sprang to his feet and started around the table toward her, turning as he stepped somewhat sideways. She fired again. He felt a blow on his chest. She fired a third time, but by then he had her wrist, and the pistol fell to the floor. He forced her into the hall screaming. Some one called Patrolman Oppenheim. He sent for an ambulance and took the woman to the East Fifty-first Street Station.

Dr. Hughes took Clark to Flower Hospital and found that the bullet, piercing his clothes and flesh, had glanced from his breastbone. As soon as the wound was dressed Clark insisted on going home to finish his supper.

"It has given me a good appetite," he said.

THE KEY TO A DIVORCE SUIT

A Real One, Mrs. Benton Says, and She Wants to Know What Became of It.

To find out what became of a key to a room in the Brooklyn Naval Hospital is the effort of Mrs. Aletta Thompson Benton, who is suing Lieut. Commander Frederick L. Benton, in charge of the hospital, for a divorce. Supreme Court Justice Guy issued a commission yesterday to "the Commandant at any United States Naval Station, or the commanding officer of any vessel in the United States service," to examine, under oath, Howard F. Strine, a Passed Assistant Surgeon, on behalf of Mrs. Benton.

In her complaint Mrs. Benton alleges that her husband was guilty of improper conduct with Annie Grady, a waitress. She says that when she and her sister went to see Benton at the hospital on Jan. 3, 1906, they could not find him, but were directed to Room 37, which they found locked.

Witnesses were produced before the referee who said that the door never had a key, but counsel for Mrs. Benton declared he could prove that the door did have a key on the day in question.

POLICE MAY PAY KUHNE FINE.

Said to be Taking Up a Fund for the Captain.

Policemen attached to Brooklyn Police Headquarters are said to be making up a fund to pay the $250 fine imposed on Acting Captain Kuhne of the Detective Bureau when he was sentenced to thirty days' imprisonment by Justice Burr for contempt of court in ignoring a writ of habeas corpus issued in the case of Frank Jenkins, the banker.

Capt. Kuhne has said that although he did not have the money to pay the fine himself he had friends who would help him. Capt. Kuhne has not as yet been sent to jail. It was said in Brooklyn yesterday that he might be taken to Blackwell's Island instead of Raymond Street Jail.

Police Commissioner Bingham announced yesterday that Lieut. Joseph Coughlin would have charge of the Brooklyn Detective Bureau while Kuhne is serving his sentence. Questioned as to whether Kuhne's picture would be taken for the Rogues' Gallery, the Commissioner replied:

"The Kuhne case is a civil one, and the Police Department will have no hand in the arrest."

CITY BREVITIES.

Beginning to-morrow there will be band concerts in the Zoological Park every Sunday afternoon this Summer from 2:30 to 6 P. M.

Dr. Edward Blitz sails for Europe this morning on the Lapland. He is to act as a member of the jury in Solfiggio and Chamber Music in several musical institutions in Belgium, France, and Switzerland.

Supreme Court Justice Guy gave permission to the Jefferson Club of the Sixth Assembly District yesterday to mortgage its property for $3,000 to the Chelsea Realty Company for three years. The proceeds are to be used for alterations and repairs.

THE WILLOW WREN.

"Half Angel and half bird."

By ROSAMUND MARRIOTT WATSON.

FAR oversea he roamed the Winter through,
His way by Kasvin and Khorassan winging,
And now he haunts the Surrey hills anew
To charm their woodlands with his faery singing.
His prelude seems the very voice of Spring,
Through the green larchwood as he flits and perches;
Even such an air a dryad's wraith might sing
Between the beeches and the silver birches.
Light-poised, half-hid aloft upon the spray,
Hued like the olive, fine and willow-slender,
Over and over through the lyric day
He sings each delicate cadence, shy and tender.
But when the May flowers fade and grass grows long,
In wistful sequel, set 'twixt speech and sighing,
Faint fall the lingering closes of his song,
Most sweet—most sad: he knows the Spring is dying

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

SIR REDVERS BULLER.

A recently published biography of Sir Redvers Buller, written by Capt. Lewis Butler, says authoritatively that the late Sir Redvers Buller was officially asked, and even pressed, to succeed the Duke of Cambridge as Commander in Chief, but declined because he thought Lord Wolseley a better man for the place. Further, he was enough of a strategist to procrastinate until the Government then in office was compelled to resign, just when his commission was ready. The Queen told him "that though he had declined to be a Commander in Chief he had made one."

ATTERBURY AND THE PRETENDER.

It is to be feared that the ordinary American remembers Atterbury chiefly as a dignified and not too sensitively apprehensive person in "Henry Esmond," but, even so, it is interesting to know that in his coming biography by Canon Beeching there will be a reproduction of a letter supposed to be his, although signed with another name, and written to the Pretender, Beatrix Castlewood's Pretender, not Bonnie Prince Charlie. The King has given permission for reproducing the letter, and this leads to the hope of other Stuart treasures to come.

HENRY MURRAY AND HERBERT SPENCER.

Henry Murray, brother of the late David Christie Murray, who has published his memories in a volume with the grim title "A Stepson of Fortune," tells this story of Herbert Spencer:

> Walking up and down the lawn of Buchanan's house in Maresfield Gardens, I told him, in a momentary absence of our host, what a load of personal obligation I felt under to "First Principles," and added that I intended to devote the reading hours of the next two or three years to a thorough study of his entire output. "What have you read of mine?" he asked. I told him. . . . "Then," said Spencer—and it was the only time I have ever heard such a counsel from the lips of any writer regarding his own work—"I should say that you have read quite enough." He fell silent for a moment, and then added, "I have passed my life in beating the air."

BIOGRAPHY OF MEREDITH.

During his lifetime but little was known of the personality of George Meredith. To his intimate friends, however, he revealed himself as an exceptionally brilliant conversationalist, a scholar of rare humor and a rich poetic fancy. As a subject for the biographer, therefore, Meredith opens up a delightful storehouse of literary and human interest. The first to avail himself of this field is J. A. Hammerton, whose volume, "George Meredith in Anecdote and Criticism," will shortly be published in this country by Mitchell Kennerley simultaneously with its appearance, under the imprint of Grant Richards, in England. This book, commenced six or seven years ago, was originally intended as a souvenir of Meredith's birthday. In England it will appear as a companion volume to Mr. Hammerton's "Stevensonia."

AMERICAN HISTORY REWRITTEN.

Dr. Robert Livingston Schuyler of Yale University, in a monograph issued by the Macmillan Company under the title "The Transition in Illinois from British to American Government," takes occasion to differ with certain well-known historical authorities. He proves that the Lewis and Clark expedition was not so important after all, if we comprehend that the possession of the territory was unprofitable to Great Britain, and overthrows the myth relating to Clark's entrance into Karkarkia in July, 1775. In his treatment of the peace negotiations of 1782, the author shows how the policy of France and Spain was opposed to the United States, and points out the prominence of Jay in defeating the schemes of those Governments. Dr. Schuyler is probably the first historian to make use of the instructions and correspondence of Miralles, the Spanish agent to the United States.

MONUMENTAL RUSKIN COMPLETED.

The last two volumes of the Cook and Wedderburn edition of the complete works of John Ruskin, bearing the imprint of Longmans, Green & Co. in this country, bring the set up to thirty-seven. Volumes XXXVI and XXXVII contain practically all of the great art critic's letters, among which those to literary friends form a major portion—the Brownings, Dr. John Brown, Lowell, Norton, Carlyle, Rossetti, Froude—and those to artists are only second—George Richmond, Holman Hunt, Burne-Jones, and Watts. One more volume, which will complete the set, will be issued in the Autumn. This will consist of a bibliography and an index of 100,000 references. To such an edition as this, a masterpiece of editorial enterprise, discrimination, and toil, such a bibliography and index are absolutely indispensable, and will complete the satisfaction of those who possess this final memorial edition of Ruskin.

INSPIRED BY ALCOHOL?

A few months ago, during Mrs. Atherton's last stay in New York, an interview with that lady was published in the columns of THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS. In this interview Mrs. Atherton stated that the hero of her recent novel "The Gorgeous Isle"—a poet whose muse was eloquent only under the inspiration of alcoholic stimulus—was a composite picture of two famous writers, Ernest Dowson, and the "most brilliant of living poets." The identity of the latter, Mrs. Atherton refused to divulge at the time for very sufficient reasons. These reasons, however, no longer exist, and Mrs. Atherton accordingly makes the following interesting statement in explanation of her TIMES interview: "It was Swinburne to whom I referred. The peculiarity about his poetic inspiration to which I called attention was well known in the literary circles of London. When Watts-Dunton, with the best intentions in the world, no doubt, took him away from London to Putney, and cured him of his weakness he destroyed his inspiration. Swinburne became a temperate man, but he ceased to write great poetry. It is true, however, that he returned to the habit in his old age and used to slip away to the 'pubs.' But his inspiration was gone. Of course, Swinburne is immortal, but think of the additional pleasures he might have given the world by writing other great poems if Watts-Dunton had not acted as he did."

HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.

"The recent death of Dr. Edward Everett Hale," writes Roy Mason of this city to THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS, "brought up the subject of the New England school of writers," and he notes that Monday, June 14, was the ninety-eighth anniversary of the birth of Harriet Beecher Stowe. Continuing, Mr. Mason says: "In two years from now will come the centennial of the writer whose work had a far greater effect than any other on the progress and destiny of this country. It was before the publication of 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' that Thomas Carlyle wrote in 'Heroes and Hero Worship':

> Do not books accomplish miracles, as Runes were fabled to do? They persuade men. Not the wretchedest circulating-library novel, which foolish girls thumb and con in remote villages, but will help to regulate the actual practical weddings and households of these foolish girls. So "Celia" felt, so "Clifford" acted; the foolish Theorem of Life stamped into those young brains comes out as a solid Practice one day. Consider whether any Rune in the wildest imagination of Mythologist ever did such wonders as on the actual firm Earth some Books have done!

"Nine years later, in 1850, Harriet Beecher Stowe wrote a book which certainly 'persuaded men.' James Forbes Rhodes, in his History of the United States, says that no literary influence had as much to do with the change of sentiment which took place in the Northern States between 1850 and 1890 as 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.' The eminent English political economist, J. E. Cairnes, remarked in his work on the 'Slave Power': 'The fugitive slave law was of doubtful benefit to the Slave Power; it's first fruit was "Uncle Tom's Cabin."' Is it not fitting that there should be some memorial to this famous woman and all that she accomplished for her country two years hence?"

PRINCESSE DE LAMBALLE.

B. C. Hardy Writes a Sympathetic Biography of Marie Antoinette's Devoted Friend, the Most Appealing Character in the History of the French Revolution.

OF THE BLOOD ROYAL OF FRANCE.

A Woman Who Fainted at Sight of a Lobster but Had Courage to Face Death.

By PROF. CHRISTIAN GAUSS.

WHEN one picks up a work, ostensibly on a historical subject, bound beautifully in red and gold, and, opening it, discovers that it is illustrated with portraits of great ladies, he may be pardoned if he begins to read with suspicion. He will expect, in this jaded age of bookmaking for the people, and often by the people, the sensational rather than the true. This prejudgment will be strengthened if the reader finds that his author begins to write in his first paragraph "at the top of his voice," as it were, and tells us that "in that storm of wills and passions things beautiful and terrible were done, such as the generations cannot choose but remember when, with an insatiable hunger, they turn yet again to that thunderous page on which is written the History of the Terror. But above the midnight wrack shine many starry deeds, and the nature in us invokes recital of these as an only possible palliative to the scarcely credible horrors with which they stand surrounded."

One feels that the author had gone to school to Carlyle, but had not quite succeeded in mastering the difficult art of writing history in dithyrambs. It is with such misgivings that one begins to read what is, after all, the really excellent book* by B. C. Hardy on the Princesse de Lamballe; her whose "silvery note," in the authentic Carlylean phrase, "was lost in the world-tornadoes of the Revolution." For that first impression will be rapidly dissipated as the author warms to his work and we follow him into his narrative. There will, to be sure, recur here and there certain petty and harmless affectations of style which betoken, we should say, the hand of the novice, the wrist of one not yet unstiffened and limbered to the work of writing. We shall find the Duc d'Orléans like a "huge spider" engaged in the impossible task of spinning webs of venom. But on the whole such overwriting is rare, and in the main the biography is rectilinear. The narrative is straightforward, the facts are chosen and arranged with much art, and the writer shows so thorough a knowledge of the background of his drama that his book will possess interest even for the student of history. It seems to have been the fashion for all those who, like Sièyes, had succeeded in living through the Terror, later to write their memoirs; and with this library of anecdote and incident Mr. Hardy is unusually familiar.

The Princesse de Lamballe had been superintendent of the household to Marie Antoinette, and we have here, among other things, a remarkably telling picture of how a Queen lived in the days before the Revolution. His portraits, too, are accurate and striking—the sad Queen Maria Leczinska, who carried about with her the skull of the once gay Ninon de l'Enclos for a toy, with which she held converse, addressing it as Ma Mignonne; the once reckless and pleasure-loving Marie Antoinette, who was so fond of the Princesse that she had her portrait painted upon her mirror so that during her absence she could see her every day; the stolid, lumbering, pathetic Louis XVI., from whose composition the sense of drama was absent, and whom the necessity for action always seems to have stricken dumb; the faithless Duc d'Orléans, father of Louis Philippe, whose courting of popular favor could not save him from the guillotine; and the Princesse herself, so nervous and sensitive that she fainted at the sight of even a painted lobster, who yet returned to Paris to share the dangers of the Queen and showed such fortitude and courage in her last days at La Force. In the background there are a number of equally well drawn, if less important, figures; the finest type of them all, doubtless, being the Duc de Penthièvre, father-in-law of the Princesse, who for a long time escaped the hatred which the populace bore to the supporters of the King. But the Jacobins began finally to lust for his vast estates, and when reminded of his past services and of his many benefactions, how he yearly gave half his income to the poor, they retorted, "It would be better that he gave it all, then the poor would receive double." And when this robbers' impertinence was reported to the old Duke he answered, with characteristic calm, "Their arithmetic is correct." It is the recital of such incidents that sets us immediately into relations of understanding and sympathy with the characters of a past age, and gives the book its air of convincing reality.

Mme. de Staël has said, in attempting to set forth the gayety and sociability of the French in contrast to the heaviness and isolation of the Germans, that the French would be capable of giving a ball and dancing in the crater of Vesuvius. As we read this rather intimate account of the life at Court before the Revolution, the statement does not seem at all fantastic. With the State coffers practically empty, and rumbles of the Revolution already in the air, the Court gave a dinner for seventy people for which the butcher's bill alone was 102,000 francs, and at which a Rhine carp was served to the King alone at a cost of 4,000 francs. He took but a mouthful and thought it tough, so sent it out to the servants. And all this was done, too, not as a banker lavishly gives a ball on the eve of his bankruptcy, in the desperate hope of re-establishing his credit, but through sheer naïve unconsciousness of the impending disaster.

The Princesse de Lamballe, worthy of all respect as she was, whose terrible fate has enlisted the sympathies of later generations, has yet suffered somewhat at the hands of hero worshippers. Not the least of these was Thomas Carlyle, and most readers will recall the famous apostrophe which Mr. Hardy places at the opening of his work. "She was beautiful, she was good, she had known no happiness. Young hearts, generation after generation, will think, with themselves: O worthy of worship, thou king-descended, god-descended, and poor sister woman! why was I not there; and some Sword Balmung or Thor's Hammer in my hand?" Mr. Hardy's book is written, on the whole, in a lower key, and he gives us a distinctly lifelike picture of the woman in her life of every day, treating her with all becoming reverence, omitting nothing in this record of her heroism and devotion, setting down naught in malice, and yet letting us see through to the little failings that make her woman. She gains in being thus humanized, and the author has given us a work that is at once interesting and authentic.

CHARLES W. ELIOT.

AN appreciation of Charles W. Eliot, late President of Harvard, from the pen of a German educator, has the twofold interest due to its subject and its author. The title of the volume is "Charles W. Eliot, President of Harvard, May 19, 1869, to May 19, 1909," (Houghton Mifflin Company,) and the author is Dr. Eugen Kuehnemann, Professor of Philosophy at the University of Breslau and twice within the last three years German Interchange Professor at Harvard. The work was originally written for a German magazine, and this presentation of it in America is the translation of Dr. A. W. Boesche of Harvard.

Amid all that has been said and written of Dr. Eliot within the past months there has been nothing more full of commendation than the words of this German professor of philosophy. He has studied Harvard before Dr. Eliot took the leadership and Harvard as it is to-day. He has searched the speeches and essays of Dr. Eliot, and has constructed from them a unified system which he calls the educational philosophy and the social philosophy of Dr. Eliot. He finds in the American not a great original thinker, but the highest type of statesman and organizer, the finest type of a democratic civilization, and in him a vindication of democratic principles.

It is curious that at the time the whole people is uniting in the praise of the work of Dr. Eliot, the system of our higher education is being very harshly criticised, and in certain quarters there is something like hopelessness for the college. This feeling of dissent and protest Dr. Kuehnemann seems to be aware of, but he casts it lightly aside, and is firm in his belief that the Harvard system of liberty, i. e., the free elective system, is the very best developer of self-reliance and usefulness for the young American. But the problem of which he is so certain is by no means settled in the minds of American educators.

There should be a good deal of encouragement for doubters in the pages of this book, and certainly for every one who reads it a better understanding of the ideals that have made Harvard what we find it to-day.

CIVIC SCIENCE AND GOOD HEALTH

Secretary Allen of the Bureau of Municipal Research Discusses the Physical Improvement of School Children.

WILLIAM H. ALLEN, Secretary of the Bureau of Municipal Research, author of "Intelligent Democracy," is heralded in his new books,* "Civics and Health," with a most enthusiastic introduction by Prof. Sedgwick of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who declares that no one can read this volume or even its chapter headings without surprise and rejoicing; surprise that the physical basis of effective citizenship has hitherto been so utterly neglected in this country, rejoicing that so much in the way of prevention of incapacity and unhappiness can be so easily done and is actually beginning to be done. Through our public schools, our strongest American institution, the new reformer, who is not for theory, but all for getting things done soon and done right, would see health in this country brought up to a higher standard by a system of school examination followed by corrective work. Examination on entering the schools, examination for promotion from grade to grade by tests of personal hygiene, by tests of physical condition will raise the future health of the whole country. Our age has become convinced that disease is not a necessity; that the expense to the State of all the innumerable asylums and special schools for defectives may at some future day be enormously lessened by bringing up the standard of health of the new generation.

It is all a matter of education. Letting in the sunshine of knowledge and of correction of known defects of the youngest children in the schools, and so on through the grades, so that no boy or girl will leave grammar school to go to work, or high school to go to college without being of a certain standard of normal physical condition—is a big ideal, one full of potential energy for the Republic. The building up of sound citizens is a work of civics peculiarly the province of our schools. Granted that it will require a revision of the curriculum! It would be difficult to find any schoolman or schoolwoman in all our States and Territories who would not declare, if perfectly free to do so, that nothing in the United States needs revision more than the public schools' curriculum. It has gone on loading subjects upon boys and girls who are not physically fit to carry such strain.

Health is a civic obligation. When health rights are enforced the physical condition of children in the schools will not be a matter of alarm as it is now, when in crowded cities it is found that thousands of boys and girls are suffering from malnutrition; so common is this that the immediate distress of it appeals more directly to most well-to-do citizens than its threat to our civilization. From those who survive a half-starved childhood come our criminals, our insane, our home heathen of various types and kinds.

An education of some degree, considered a fundamental right of the American child of either native or foreign extraction, is also our strongest protection against the social and industrial evils that wait upon ignorance. The authority of the schools is a recognized one. If by physical examination of the child at school society learns to read the index of his home conditions, affecting both his health and his progress at school, it will become easy to correct these conditions. The school child is under civic control for six hours a day during the formative years after those first and most important of all, from birth to the sixth year.

Medical examination in New York public schools is yet very much in its infancy, but teachers are learning to become their own sanitary engineers by applying to schoolrooms the principles which Dr. Gorgas applied to Panama—knowledge, disinfection, absolute cleanliness, education—to lead up to inspection. Hot sunshine and oxygen are really just beginning their careers as disease preventors, even in many schools in "good" wards of the metropolis.

Dr. Allen's chapter on "School Surgery and Relief Objectionable if Avoidable" meets with decision the palliative efforts of treatment at school. That might serve in Europe, but is out of tune with our institutions. It is cheaper and better for the school to see that outside agencies prepare the child for education rather than itself to take the place of those outside agencies. The modern sociologist recognizes the family as the unit of social treatment, and the school can only work for the children in the matter of health by co-operation with the home and bringing mothers into connection with all curative agencies and in using its influence in establishing new ones of imperative need to children's health.

"Have their teeth attended to first and many of the eye defects will disappear." This was an unexpected contribution to the debate upon free eyeglasses for the school children of New York City. So little do most of us realize the importance of sound, clean teeth and the interrelation of stomach and sense nerves, that even the school Principals thought the eye specialist was exaggerating when he declared that bad teeth cause indigestion and eye strain. "Bad" teeth mean to most people dirty teeth, and offensive odors, loose, crooked, and isolated teeth or black stumps. Even among dentists a great many do not appreciate that "bad" teeth mean indigestion, lowered vitality, plague spots for contaminating sound teeth and for breeding disease germs.

A strong plea is made for free dental clinics of the kind organized by Dr. H. L. Wheeler, acting for an industrial aid school maintained by the Children's Aid Society. Here 350 children have been examined and their mouths treated, forty dentists taking turns in giving time to this work, which is a big gift to the municipality from dentists, whose work in New York is by the expensive hour.

Dental examination of children applying for work certificates gives the health and school authorities a means of enforcing their precepts. When no child is allowed to go to work whose teeth cause malnutrition or disgust, the news will spread and both children and parents will see more clearly the grave need for dental care.

The free-extraction dental parlors, Dr. Allen declares, are doing a vast amount of harm. In every city are dental quacks who injure wage-earning adults as much as soothing-syrup quacks injure babies. Instead of teaching people to preserve their teeth, they extract, and then make a contract for a gold crown or for a false set at an exorbitant price. A reputable dentist has said that a dental parlor can do more damage to the welfare of the race in a few months than a well-intentioned man in the profession can repair in a lifetime. Yet Dr. Allen concedes that the dental parlors are doing an educational service not otherwise provided, since that it is conceivable that in many cities they are doing less harm by their malpractice than are many well-intentioned men in the profession by neglect of public needs, or by failure to organize facilities for meeting those needs.

"Meeting Health Obligations," "The Last Days of Tuberculosis," "Official Machinery for Enforcing Health Rights," through school reports and through the press, are discussed with directness and force, while under the heading, "Alliance of Hygiene, Religion, and Patriotism" are given the inspiring principles which govern this call to hitch free health to the free institutions of our schools, to the end that our future citizens may be stronger and more efficient as the country grows older, and more wise.

SOME BOSTON BIRDS.

HORACE WINSLOW WRIGHT'S well printed and illustrated little book on the "Birds of the Boston Public Gardens," (Houghton Mifflin Company, $1,) is much more than a study in migration, as the author terms it. It is a most interesting study in observation. It deals with a subject possessing so many of the joys of open-air life that the plan as well as the success of Mr. Wright may, perhaps, encourage bird lovers in other cities to go and do likewise. The Boston Public Gardens, where the author's observations were made through the seasons of 1901-8, contain twenty-four acres, and being surrounded with so much of the noise and bustle of a large city, it may naturally appear somewhat remarkable that so many different birds were found. The record day was May 12, 1908, when 137 migrant birds were seen, including twenty-eight species.

Bradford Torrey, who contributes an introduction, tells of his surprise twenty-five years ago or so, when he began his study of birds in the Boston Gardens, of finding a city park so likely a place to look for nocturnal birds of passage. A friend of his, some years later, asked a distinguished ornithologist where he should go in May to obtain sight of rare warblers that had hitherto eluded him, and the answer was: "Go to Central Park, New York." The conditions that make the Boston Gardens a favorite stopping place for migratory birds will evidently apply, to a greater or less extent, to any other public park. Surrounded as it is by large trees, with a pond of nearly four acres in the centre, and with a quantity of shrubbery, small plants and beds of flowers, it seems to form a natural aviary, and cases are frequent where migrant birds have remained there a week or more.

The list of birds observed by Mr. Wright in the Boston Public Gardens includes 116 North American varieties, arranged in the order adopted by the American Ornithologists' Union, and, in addition, two introduced species, the house sparrow and European goldfinch and two foreign species, the Java sparrow and European blackbird, which, the author assumes, had evidently escaped from captivity.

AN ENGLISH TALE OF OUR DIVORCES

"Marriage a la Mode" by Mrs. Humphry Ward Based Upon a Peculiarly Sordid American Tragedy.

TO a large class of confirmed readers of fiction a novel by Mrs. Humphry Ward is a novel by Mrs. Humphry Ward and one of the things nobody can afford to miss. Mrs. Ward and Mrs. Wharton divide the suffrages of the women in particular. To admire and read both is a social—almost a religious—obligation. The present volume,* however, though it carries Mrs. Ward's name on the title page, is different.

In the first place, the author leaves that charmed English circle which exists for many stay-at-home Americans largely because she has written about it and invades America itself, not altogether graciously of tactfully. The action begins on a Potomac River steamboat bound for Mount Vernon, dallies on the noble lawn where Washington once walked master, threads the crush of a White House reception, pauses for a fancy sketch of Mr. Roosevelt, and even carries the rude book idea so far as to "take in" Niagara.

The heroine is an American heiress—or a sort of Lady Rose's-Daughterized version of one. For Mrs. Ward's touch is not so sure, her hand, to put it baldly, has lost its cunning, when she deals with that strange creature the American girl who has brought herself up. The sting of the reflection on Mrs. Ward's perspicacity as a woman or her skill as a psychic anatomist is somewhat assuaged, of course, by the circumstance that nobody is quite sure of this extraordinary phenomenon—least of all the phenomenon itself, but the character of Daphne Floyd remains a crude burlesque, the monstrosity of which is hardly excused by the mixed ancestry of low Irish and hot Spanish with which her creator has been at pains to endow her.

There is, in fact, nothing Lady Rose's-Daughterlike about the American girl who has brought herself up. This young person may drive a coach and four through British prejudices or play at her National game of "la flirt," as the French name it with light-hearted disregard for the rules of the legitimate game, she may display no end of arrogance, and after an Englishman has married her for her money live to please herself and not him.

She may even—if she is that kind—behave as vulgarly as any other jealous woman, and when she is weary of the bargain arrange a Dakota divorce as unscrupulously as an Englishwoman would arrange an elopement with another man—but she will not in the least resemble Daphne Floyd.

In the second place Mrs. Ward's book is different because it is crude and obviously a tract—a British tirade against the divorce laws of certain of the Western States of the American Union. The laws themselves may be bad enough—there is no intention here to defend them—but Mrs. Ward in her tract assumes that the divorce evil grows out of the laws, not the laws out of the evils which inspire the divorces—these evils being numerous and somewhat deeply rooted in the constitution of a society which is being recast too rapidly not to give many shocks to old-fashioned notions of old-fashioned institutions.

For her subject Mrs. Ward has selected a peculiarly sordid tragedy which in this era of transition has unfortunately become a rather common one. The European who for the sake of his worldly fortunes marries an American girl takes the risk of not being able to break her in to the rules his people live by or impose upon her the traditions they cherish. She takes the risk of finding those rules intolerable and the traditions absurd or worse. Any amount of discomfort and scandal may result—as it does in this case. But the trouble in so far as it is local lies in the European gentry's system of insisting on getting their wives endowed, not in the Dakota divorce laws.

It is because Mrs. Ward has put her cart before her horse, perhaps, that she has fallen so far below her usual standard as a story writer. More likely, however, the trouble is that the mote in Brother Jonathan's eye has obsessed her so much more than ever did the beam in John Bull's eye that she has done what she has not done before—forgotten the novel in the tract. Such an obsession is usually fatal to a work of art. Her too obvious attempt to make amends to the Americans—faithful readers of hers—by introducing two or three characters of American birth and habitat who behave and think almost like English folk, is a piece of stupendous tactlessness upon the part of Mrs. Ward.

A HUMANITARIAN'S RELIGIOUS VIEWS

Tolstoy in "The Teachings of Jesus" Expounds the Gospels and Takes Issue With the Church.

ALL those interested in the work of the great Russian humanitarian realize that for the last two decades he has been more and more turning his back upon free or pure art and giving himself up to the consideration, and particularly the practice, of livable ideals. There are, in fact, two Tolstoys—the great artist who wrote "War and Peace," "Anna Karenina," and the "Kreutzer Sonata," and this later earnest prophet who is living the most extraordinary experimental life of our times. "The Teaching of Jesus," this beautiful little red booklet,* is a work of the later Tolstoy, but it proves also that the great artist in him has not yet died.

Like his "What Shall We Do Then?" "The Teaching of Jesus" is the result of his own experience. Two years ago the Count formed a class of village children of from 10 to 13 years for the study of the Gospels. He "wished to impart to them in a way they would understand, and that would have an influence on their lives, Christ's teaching," and he told them in his own words those parts of the four Gospels which seemed to him most understandable, most suitable for children, and at the same time most necessary for moral guidance in life. And having thus discovered what they grasp most easily, and by what they are most attracted, he composed this booklet, primarily for children, "who, according to Christ's words, are especially receptive to the teaching about the Kingdom of God."

It is well known that Tolstoy does not believe that the modern nations or the Church, for that matter, are really practicing Christianity, and he has definitely said so in an article recently published in the Sunday TIMES. He believes that "money is violence," and that most of it is tainted and all of it unnecessary; that when the Church accepts these inequalities in worldly fortune and receives into its fold complacently and without reproof men of enormous wealth, who by that fact possess the power of constraining others to do their will, it is doing something fundamentally wrong and diametrically opposed to Christianity as taught by its Founder. He says it is nonsense to talk of loving your neighbor as yourself when you ride to the opera in a motor car and pass him on his way who has carried a cold dinner and probably lives five in a room. To be sure, the present volume is not at all controversial, and it includes no such modern instances, yet, whether one agrees or not, one cannot escape the conviction that it is this view of life which lies behind these plain, simple and direct expositions of the teachings of Jesus, and it is in this spirit that the parables are taken up and their meaning and bearing made explicit. The work of the translators has been admirably done, and they have left in this earnest and forceful style its strong personal accent and its touch of the prophet's naïveté. It is a striking example of how the greatest truths can be told in the simplest language.

Tolstoy has long since ceased to believe in working for money, for the sake merely of amassing capital, and he disbelieves in every form of monopoly, even copyright. He has always believed, however, in putting his ideas not only into books, but into practice, and it is therefore characteristic that we should read on the title page of this new volume the strange legend, "No rights reserved." NOVELIZED DRAMA.

TWO books founded on successful plays are "The Merry Widow" and "The Battle." (G. W. Dillingham Company, $1.50 each.) Mr. Cleveland Moffett, author of the latter play, has made an interesting novel based on the adventures of "The richest man in America," John J. Haggleton, who lives in the slums of New York City in order to win the love of his newly discovered son. The problems of capital and labor are dealt with and an appealing love story runs through the plot. The novel follows the main lines of the play, with some text from Mr. Moffett's earlier story, "A King in Rags."

Mr. Moffett's presentation of the character and beliefs of the capitalist are ably contrasted with the theories of reformers of various types, and while the novel bears all the ear-marks of having been adapted from a play, its theme is sufficiently interesting to raise it above others of its class.

The anonymous adapter of "The Merry Widow" has produced a work which will prove of small interest to those who saw the opera, while to those who are not familiar with the original it will appear merely a poorly written and illogical hodge-podge of sentimental romance and cheap humor.

The story of Sonia and Danilo, when presented on the stage with the accompaniment of Lehar's tuneful music, had a charm of its own, but baldly set forth as a novel, it has little to recommend it.

A SUMMER IN TOURAINE.

THERE have been numerous books on the châteaux of Touraine and their wonderfully rich historical associations ever since their architectural beauties and the magical charm of their setting first began to attract and delight English and American visitors. Mr. Lees, however, in "A Summer in Touraine" (A. C. McClurg & Co., $2.75) has produced a book that is in many respects more complete and more interesting than any of its predecessors. Its especial value consists in the fact that its author has had access to many châteaux now in the hands of private owners who permit no public invasion of them; for the remarkable unselfishness, hospitality, and public spirit of the Siegfried family, who own and occupy Langeais and who allow the public visitation of their most intimate belongings, often to their own discomfort, is quite without parallel in the Loire country—and probably anywhere else.

Mr. Lees is an Englishman living in France and he speaks with authority on what relates to French life and history. He has made excellent use in this book of the exceptional advantages that were given him in the study of the châteaux. He has much historical information at his fingers' ends, but much more to the purpose is the sympathetic eye with which he takes in the architectural and natural beauties that beset the traveler in Tours and the graphic touch he has in describing them. He is familiar not only with the historical connections, but also with the many allusions and descriptions which Balzac has left of his native province, and even Rabelais.

Mr. Lees and a friend took an automobile trip, beginning at Blois, and after exploring Chambord and some less known chateaux in that neighborhood, going down the Loire through Tours, then turning up the River Vienne, crossing over to the River Indre, and ending at Chenonceaux. Then they made a brief excursion to the Sarthe country, not far distant, and were well repaid for examining several little known chateaux at Le Lude and Jarzé. Mr. Lees gives, of course, full accounts of the famous buildings that everybody knows about—Blois, Chambord, Chaumont, Amboise, Langeais, Chinon, Azay-le-Rideau, Loches, and Chenonceaux. Of the many such structures less known and less accessible that he visited may be mentioned especially Du Moulin, scarcely changed since the fifteenth century; Réaux, "a delightful manor house in dark red brick and stone arranged in a symmetrical pattern"; Montreuil-Bellay, containing one of the most remarkable mediaevel kitchens in France; Petit Thouars, La Guerche, charming from the fact that it is unrestored and untenanted; Grillemont, Montrésor, and others, each of which has something distinctive and of interest.

The book is beautifully and lavishly illustrated. There are eighty-seven admirable half-tone reproductions of photographs showing exteriors and interiors, and twelve colored plates from drawings by Maxwell Armfield, conveying the delicate charm of water color and the artist's instinctive feeling for the picturesque and for the luminous atmosphere of the French landscape. There is also a sketch map showing the visitors' route in Touraine.

A MODERN SEA FIGHT.

A commercial fight, waged with the weapons of business, and therefore quite different from the vision that the words "a sea fight" bring to one's mind, but nevertheless a battle for supremacy at sea, is the sort of story that Harold Bindloss tells in "Thrice Armed," (Frederick A. Stokes Company.) Mr. Bindloss publishes novels with astonishing frequency, and, no matter in what quarter of the globe he lays their scenes, he always writes of the region as if he had known it intimately from childhood. His present book shows no lessening of that accurate and minute knowledge and vigorous presentation of the setting of his drama which have characterized the widely separated scenes of his former stories. "Thrice Armed" relates the story of a struggle between an independent shipping company and a monopoly ruled by an unscrupulous man on the Pacific coast of Canada. Nearly all of the action takes place at sea in all sorts of coast and sea going vessels. The grim fight between the two commercial interests is complicated by the fact that the young man, who is one of the chief figures in the battle against the monopoly, falls in love with the daughter of the unscrupulous man who runs it. The story is skillfully constructed, has plenty of action and incident, and is thoroughly alive with the vigorous life of the Northwest.

AN INTERNATIONAL TALE WITH AN AMERICAN HEROINE

Mr. Locke spent many months abroad in preparation for the writing of this fine and exciting novel. FAME'S PATHWAY

A Romance of a Genius

By H. C. CHATFIELD-TAYLOR

Illustrations by JOB

HAMLIN GARLAND writes:

"I salute the author of 'Fame's Pathway.' The book interested me deeply. I read every word of it. It is all mighty convincing. The characterizations of Molière, Madeleine, and Trinette are fine, fine! I wanted the story to go on. I wanted to know more of the realities of the dramatist's career. To have brought him so close to us was an achievement. This is a remarkable piece of work."

WILLIAM A. NITZE, University of California, Romanic Languages, says: "I have just finished your new volume on Molière which you so kindly sent me. Allow me to congratulate you on it. It was not an easy task to write such a romance; but you have succeeded, it seems to me, not only in creating the illusion so essential to fiction, but in sticking to what we know of the truth. For those who do not realize what an actor-playwright's life in those days was, your graphic synthesis will be a great aid in making their estimate of Molière the man. And for those who do, it will fix the picture more vividly in memory."

From Mrs. REGINALD DE KOVEN: "You know your atmosphere superlatively well. I find that the feeling of sympathy for Molière himself in his various difficulties is very keen, and it makes for life and the feeling of life. There are various passages, notably the description of the island on the love day of your lovers, which are very poetic indeed."

Professor T. F. CRANE, Cornell University, says: "It seems to me that you have used your material in a very masterly way. I have already called the attention of my class in the Seventeenth Century to the novel, and suggested that they would find it an interesting study to trace the historical sources of the material.

"It seems to me that you have been most accurate, and the book certainly gives a very vivid and true picture of the times."

From an American leader of London society: "I don't know when I have enjoyed reading anything so much as your book. It is so full of the colour and life of those days that you feel almost to be living then. It is all so human, so real, and so pathetic, it holds you to the very end. I couldn't leave it till I had finished it, and sat up nearly the whole night from Chicago. You have gone far on 'Fame's Pathway' in writing such a book, and I congratulate you with all my heart.'".

TOURING EUROPE IN ANCIENT DAYS

THE remark that every man's life contains the material for at least one great book has this limitation: Whether "captain of industry" or mediæval knight, the man must be fortunate in his Boswell. This is especially true of the so-called odyssey of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries in the present volume.* The gentlemen errant who wandered to and fro across Europe in 1460 and 100 years after were doubly fortunate. Each had his admiring Boswell; each, a historian of exceptional sympathy, patience, and skill to make the chronicles available for modern readers.

The distinction of these chronicles lies neither in the genius of the writers nor in their essential importance as history. Granting the value of all documents which cast light on character and commonplaces, the present chronicles merely swell the volume of the less familiar memorial literature of middle Europe. As the early voyagers had their Hakluyt, and even the buccaneers their Esquemeling, so the Baron Lev of Bohemia, Wilwont of Schaumburg, the Elector Palatine Frederick II. and Duke Heinrich of Silesia carried in their trains some scrivinger, companion at arms, or plodding chamberlain as court historian. And as few chroniclers possess the abandon of a Cellini or the spirit of Machiavelli, so their pens halt, the pictures lack convincing settings, the narratives become a measure of the writer's limitations.

This fact should be mentioned that the credit due Mrs. Cust may be recognized. To these skeletons of the past, as it were, she has added flesh, sinew, and red blood, until the Europe of the Renaissance moves across the pages in animated pageant with kingly exploits, pride, pomp, and piety, its beggar ambassadors worshipping, wondering, tilting, dancing, loving, fighting, and wandering—ever wandering.

The pages offer an abundance of amusement for those who run and read. Exploits ludicrous and curious divert the mind and suggest comparisons between the Renaissance and modern life. In these parallels rather than in diversion merely is found the deeper interest and the best reason for the narratives, covering as they do nearly 500 pages, with maps, descriptive notes, and a chronological table of 128 years of European history.

The interest does not lie so much in good history, as such, but in what school histories do not teach. For the average reader the story of the Renaissance has painful gaps and mysterious lapses, rendered more confusing by the mingled fact and fancy of biased historians and the imagination of the novelists. Merely the sharp, magnified outlines of great events linger isolated in the memory, like a naturalist's beetle impaled in a microscope.

That "Gentlemen Errant" bridges some of these chasms is in itself a recommendation. That the narratives offer unfailing diversion as well should be regarded as high praise. Each element of interest, too, is more or less dependent upon the other. One wanderer worships, another fights, the third intrigues in imperial court, the fourth seeks ruin in bankruptcy. The flashes of character, the quaint and ludicrous episodes, and even the commonplaces illuminate a decadence of mediæval society upon which modern life is built.

One has a keener appreciation, for example, of the religious fervor of the cathedral builders, the terrors of the early voyagers and the childlike credulity of a superstition-ridden age after following Baron Lev of Bohemia and his suite on their pilgrimage through the Low Countries, England, France, and Spain to the shrine of Compostella. Thinking more of prayer than of conquest, the chronicler, with an untiring love for the marvelous and the commonplace, fills his pages with strange, fantastical legends and tales of astonishing relics. With childlike innocence the wanderers place more emphasis on a custom among the English of both sexes to kiss indiscriminately on formal occasions that on the baths in Mechlin and Brussels with the bathers unadorned and unashamed. Unquestioning, they prayed at the jewel-laden tomb of St. Thomas at Canterbury and "looked upon the wonder-working relics of the martyr, the saintly head, brains, and tonsure with the guilty sword whereby they were cleft and stirred."

In Spain they still saw the dragons and lizards with which Cervantes was to fill the addled brain of Don Quixote. The trackless country beyond Salamanca they found a land of terrors.

> The serpents and dragons were short and thick, with forked tongs and wings like bats, wherewith they could pursue men and animals "for the space of two leagues." The scorpions were the size of ordinary hunting dogs and the lizards not much smaller.

Nor can the reader fail to appreciate their terror of the sea, when, twenty-six years before the first voyage of Columbus, the Bohemians visit Finis Terræ, the famous "end of the earth," and gaze upon the most wonderful sight of all, the limitless Atlantic, > the great water that departeth the world asunder; A perilous and impassable flood of wracks and tempests stirred, indeed, with magical islands and sheltering magical monsters, but leading to no firmer shore than that of some phantom pays du bleu, some dreamlike "Land of Behest" tofore the Gates of God.

In the story of Wilwont of Schaumburg, a master of war, and of Frederick II., Elector Palatine of the Rhine, the horizon is broader and more comprehensive, the events more significant.

The chronicle of Wilwont, Ambassador to the English Court of Henry VII. and soldier under Charles of Bergundy and Maximilian I., is cast in a heroic mold. Yet the fascinating tales of his exploits, aside from the diversion they afford, are significant in what might be called their obligato. The intrigues of camp and court, the blood and sweat of war, and the pageantry of peace have as their accompaniment the rebellions in Flanders and the beginnings of modern popular government.

Historically Hubertus's chronicle of the Elector Palatine is the best known and the most familiar of the four narratives. For this reason, and because the characters in the drama are familiar, it is needless to mention more than impressions of a reader, which emphasize the spirit of the day with renewed significance.

Most diverting, for example, is the comedy of Frederick's persistent and ill-starred courtships in the princely houses of the Low Countries, England, France, Spain, Hungary, and Denmark. In the light of what came after, one smiles again as the Princess of Denmark replies to an offer of marriage from Henry VIII., that if "she had two heads, she would happily give one to his Majesty," or at the effort of the Palsgrave to make Princess Mary of England a German hausfrau.

Turning these pages, the reader feels again the thrill of the Reformation and how chivalry had become more of a tradition than a fact; a holiday ceremony rather than a ruling institution. The admirable Palsgrave failed, it would seem, because he was chivalrous in a day when prevarication and treachery pervaded the Courts of Europe, and rebellion, civic and religious, filled the hearts of the people. Even while in the lists warriors fought with fragile reeds, not death-dealing lances, and with barriers between them. And through the story runs another reason for the decay and fall of chivalry in a more mercenary age. The knight errant's occupation gone, his purse and castle larder were often empty. Men like the Palsgrave were forced to think of hungry mouths and rich wives rather than of heroic feats of war. Errant ambassadors were in reality errant beggars.

What such conditions finally meant is shown with delightful candor by Hans von Schweinichen in his chronicle of the troubled rule of his master, Duke Heinrich of Silesia. The narrative, aptly called "An Epic of Debts," has for its central figure a renegade truly Falstaffan. With Duke Heinrich bankruptcy was a birthright, rank a license to plunder. None was too high or too low to be his creditor. His wanderings became those of a mendicant. To-day there are short and ugly words not in the princely calendars for such crimes, and Duke Heinrich's end would not have been so long delayed. The tale, indeed, becomes almost prophetic of a final chapter in the history of feudalism as the Duke, condemned by Rudolph II., ends his life in an upper room of the Castle of Prague, a prisoner.

ENGLISH POVERTY UNDER REVIEW

In "An Englishman's Castle" Miss Loane Draws a Sad Picture of Her Unfortunate Countrymen.

SAD and depressing pictures of poverty in England are drawn for us in M. Loane's book, "An Englishman's Castle," (Longmans, Green & Co. $2.) They are pictures of the home life of the underpaid and the unemployed who make up a very large percentage of the English people, and they show a great prevalence of want and wretchedness throughout the country.

One of the lessons they convey to the intelligent reader is that the conditions in which the industrial classes of England are placed are full of peril to the country, and that the future of the country probably depends quite as much on what shall happen to its working people as upon any other influence to which it shall be subjected.

Unquestionably England's greatest need at this moment is to better the condition of her working people. They must have more to do and get better pay for their work so that they may live in comfort and decency, self-supporting, self-respecting, and self-improving. In recent times the tendency in England has been to make the poor more and more dependent on charity, and this tendency has prevailed to such an extent that it has put a premium on laziness and thriftlessness, and contributed shockingly to the degradation of the laboring classes and at the same time has piled up a financial burden under which the nation fairly staggers.

Miss Loane makes it clear in her book that the thing to do with the British laborer is to emancipate him from charity and make him self-reliant. He takes all sorts of charitable gifts nowadays quite unblushingly, seeming to feel he is as much entitled to what anybody pleases to give him as to what he earns for himself. Sometimes he acts as though he was conferring a favor in permitting good people to be kind to him. Miss Loane tells of such an instance.

It seems she interested some of her friends in a chronic sufferer, but they soon ceased visiting the sick one because they found they had to pay for the privilege of ministering to her. The sick one's relatives made imperative and increasing demands upon the visitors' purses. "The worst part of it was," remarks Miss Loane, "that there was no fixed scale of charges. If a bill had been presented, 'To permitting Mrs. K. N. to sing hymns to my bedridden mother, 1s. 6d.; to allowing her to supply illustrated newspapers to my rheumatic husband, 3s. 9d.; to accepting a dressed doll for my crippled child, 1s. 4d.,' they might have borne it. Instead, they were asked for a milk pudding one week, five hundredweight of coal the next, a chain bedstead the next, and so on, the terms 'increasing at a geometric rate.'"

Speaking of one of her own experiences as a "district nurse" Miss Loane says, "We nursed one woman five times through rheumatic fever, and she never expressed, nor do I think she felt, the smallest gratitude to the association for its services." To some extent Miss Loane believes this lack of gratitude was due to the woman's pride in her rather distinguished ailment—a pride that was quite characteristic of her class; but, in the main, without doubt, the woman's failure to exhibit a decent appreciation of the kindness she had received was due to her feeling that she was entitled to what she got.

Miss Loane's book makes a pretty thorough exposition of the people with whom she deals. Nobody in England knows this people better than she does, nobody has studied them at closer range and with greater intelligence, and nobody has written about them in a more effective fashion. She sets before the statesmen and philanthropists of England the real inwardness of their greatest problem.

IVAN TREPOFF'S "SPIRITMIST."

Ivan Trepoff's "Spiritmist" (Donald W. Newton) is one of those unpleasant and brutally outspoken stories about which there are two opinions, one holding they are abominable and indefensible, the other that they serve an excellent purpose, by way of warning men and women that there is no escape from the old rule that the wages of sin is death. If Mr. Trepoff was to speak in his own behalf he undoubtedly would declare himself a moralist and maintain that a lofty motive guided him in the writing of his book. He would be apt to say he was convinced there were a good many persons in New York and elsewhere in America who stood in need of the moral lesson his book teaches, and he probably would insist that his teaching would have lost very much of its impressiveness if he had cloaked the wickedness of his principal characters instead of openly and completely exposing their wanton and wretched debaucheries. There could be no better reply to an argument like that than to suggest that the book be left for those to read who need it. Probably that is the thing to say about the book, no matter what we may conjecture as to the author's purposes and theories.

BRITISH SEA KINGS.

MR. G. A. R. CALLENDER in his "Sea Kings of Great Britain," (Longmans, Green & Co.,) treats of the naval exploits of Albemarle, Rooke, Benbow, Vernon, Anson, and Hawke. The book is a continuation of an earlier treatise on their predecessors—Hawkins, Drake, Howard, Grenville, and Blake. In other words, it includes some of the most important naval operations from the Restoration in 1630 to the conquest of Canada in 1755 and the "wonderful year," culminating in the batle of Quiberon, 1759. The account involves a summary of the larger moves on the chess board of history in which these battles were by turns results and determining factors; for it is the intention of the author to meet the requirements of the British Admiralty for the teaching of naval history to the midshipmen.

He has given a clear understanding of the events leading to war, the plans on which war was conducted, the operations of the military forces so far as they were related to those of the naval, the defense and attack of commerce, and the progress in organization, tactics and ship design that accompanied the events in history. He describes not only war, but politics that led to war and ended it. Mr. Callender has done all this with perspicuity, a sense of proportion, and a considerable talent for rapid and terse narrative, and he has added to this a picturesqueness in description and a power of graphic characterization of the personality of the sea dogs of the British Navy; many, indeed most of whom are delectable characters and will not infrequently beguile the attention of the non-professional reader from the technical details of the fighting, the tactics, and the strategy.

Those were times when fighting was still picturesque, and the trade of a seaman was something different from mechanics. What rich ear-filling suggestion there is in the names of the men who people these pages! John Benbow, Sir Clowdisley Shovel—we prefer the probably less accurate but more spacious Cloudesley—Admiral Byng, Cornelis de Ruyter, Cornelis Van Tromp—Mr. Callender robs him of his Van—George Anson, "the silent son-in-law of the Chancellor," Walpole; Albemarle, "very manly and majestick"; also "cogitative"; even Capt. Kidd of piratical memory, makes a momentary appearance, and Toby Smollett appears as a witness, not very trustworthy, he having in the insignificant post of surgeon's mate at Carthagena, learned something of war that afterward appears vividly in the pages of "Roderick Random." How many are the picturesque incidents besides the sordid realities of battle. The War of Jenkins's Ear—though far from entertaining to poor Jenkins; the humiliation of England by Tromp at Sheerness; King James fighting at Lowestoft, and spattered with the blood of three noblemen; Vigo Bay and the Plate Fleet; Louisburg and Quebec and Quiberon, and many battles that loom large in history. It ought not to be a laborious task for the midshipmen of England to study them as they are here presented.

FOR EXPORTERS.

A book full of information and good advice for American manufacturers and merchants who are engaged, or are about to engage, in foreign trade comes from Mr. B. Olney Hough, the editor of The American Exporter. The book is entitled "Elementary Lessons in Exporting," (the Johnston Export Publishing Company.) In this book Mr. Hough speaks as an expert, with abundant knowledge of the great foreign markets of the world, and he tells Americans who desire to sell their goods abroad how they should proceed in order to make good headway and avoid costly and damaging mistakes.

It is not necessary, he says, for the American exporter to leave his home and business to make personal study of the commercial fields in which it is his wish to operate; it really is a better thing for the exporter to avail himself of the experience somebody else has acquired in selling another exporter's goods. Well advised, the American exporter will have no difficulty, Mr. Hough thinks, in properly organizing his foreign campaigns; but along with this opinion goes the advice that it is rank folly to take up with export trade unless one is thoroughly in earnest about it and means to fight for foreign business patiently, shrewdly, and aggressively, through thick and thin, until he shall win success.

A valuable feature of Mr. Hough's book is an "Exporters' Gazette," in which is presented a large amount of information about the various countries of the world to which Americans are apt to turn when they decide to go into the export business.

SWINBURNE TO STEDMAN.

SOME remarkable letters written in 1875 by Algernon Charles Swinburne to Edmund Clarence Stedman are being printed by the permission of Miss Laura Stedman, in advance of the publication of her grandfather's biography, in the literary supplement of The London Times. In these letters Swinburne the man is revealed as he was rarely, even in private correspondence, we believe, never in public communications. He talks freely to Stedman of his likes and dislikes in poetry, of his friendships and prejudices, of his religious belief, of his pecuniary affairs, and in one letter he has a complete autobiographical sketch. He is particularly frank to Stedman in his comments on American poetry, comments which seem to be in reply to a rebuke from Stedman touching his lack of appreciation of transatlantic poets. Bryant's "Thanatopsis," he says, and Lowell's "Commemoration Ode" do not leave in his ear "the echo of a single note of song." "August meditation" in "Thanatopsis" he finds edifying, and is moved by Lowell's "noble expression of deep and grave patriotic feeling," but there is no poetry for Swinburne without "the pulse, the fire, the passion of music." It occurs to him that when Whitman is not speaking bad prose he sings, and that when he sings he sings well. But we fancy that Whitman arrogated to himself precisely the qualities of "solitary philosopher" and "patriotic orator" which Swinburne declares are not chiefly a poet's qualities. Longfellow, in Swinburne's way of thinking, had "a pretty little pipe of his own, thin and reedy," but to talk of Mr. Emerson's "poetry" seemed to him like talking of "the scholarship of a child who has not learnt his letters." Browning's verse has a recognizable tune, if a bad one, "but in the name of all the bagpipes, what is the tune of Emerson's?"

Well, let us stop and think. We may not definitely answer the question, but in another letter Swinburne tells Stedman that he rates "Hertha" highest among his own "Poems and Ballads," "finding in it the most of lyric force and music combined with the most of condensed and classified thought." Here are two stanzas of "Hertha":

> I am that which began;
> Out of me the years roll;
> Out of me God and man;
> I am equal and whole;
> God changes, and man, and the form of them bodily; I am the soul.
> * * * * * * *
> A creed is a rod,
> And a crown is of night;
> But this thing is God,
> To be man with thy might,
> To grow straight in the strength of thy spirit, and live out thy life as the light.

Here, for comparison's sake, are two stanzas of a poem by Emerson, similar in spirit to Swinburne's "Hertha":

> Far or forgot to me is near;
> Shadow and sunlight are the same;
> The vanished gods to me appear;
> And one to me are shame and fame.
> They reckon ill who leave me out;
> When me they fly, I am the wings;
> I am the doubter and the doubt,
> And I the hymn the Brahmin sings.

To us the tune in "Brahma" seems as easily recognizable as the tune in "Hertha." Perhaps the "fire and passion of music" in both of these poems is subordinated to "condensed and clarified thought." Later in the same year Swinburne writes to Stedman that he has re-read Emerson's first volume of poems and found "noble verses and passages well worth remembering." He expresses the hope that no personal feeling or consideration will ever prevent or impair his recognition of any man's higher qualities. Still, he regrets that Whittier is deplorably ready to put up with the first word, good or bad, that comes to hand, for otherwise the power, pathos, and righteousness of noble emotion in his poems would be more enjoyable and admirable. For Mr. Lowell's verse, out of the Biglow costume, he cannot bring himself to care. His theory, at the time of writing, was "that nothing which can possibly be as well said in prose ought ever to be said in verse."

We need not accept this theory blindly, nor need we give over our cherished ideas that Whittier was something of a poet; that there is much true and great poetry in the works of Longfellow; that Lowell and Bryant could sing as well as meditate and philosophize. But Swinburne's criticism, though often a matter of moods, is always sane and comprehensible. In his judgment of poetry he is neither fantastic nor pedantic. He has nothing of the precious, mystical pose of some of the critics who thrive reasonably in London and are feebly imitated nowadays in our Middle West. What he said of poetry in his letters to Swinburne he meant, and we know what he meant.

Swinburne told Stedman of a queer remark Longfellow had made to him. The Osgoods had sent him $100 for the right to publish "Atalanta," but he received little or nothing, as a general thing, from the sales of his poetry in America. Probably those sales, up to 1875, were very small. But Longfellow told him he had been robbed—"of a sum," Swinburne says, "much more than I ever had at once in my life." Longfellow was talking at random, of course, paying to his fellow-poet a sort of compliment, and thinking, perhaps, chiefly of his own sales. Longfellow was always a popular poet. Swinburne had an income. He could afford to write for the few and posterity.

In September, 1875, Swinburne is writing a Greek tragedy more purely Hellenic than "Atalanta." He says he feels "the Greek history and mythology (in its deeper sense and wider bearing) much nearer to us even yet than those of the Jews, alien from us in blood and character." Thus, the poet of Job is a Semitic alien, and the poet of Prometheus an Aryan kinsman. It will be seen that the spell of "Comparative Philology" was strong on Swinburne in 1875. His theory of the nearness of the Greeks to us and the remoteness of the Hebrews does not count for much. But it would be worth somebody's while to examine the claims of Swinburne as a Grecian; to "size up" the lyrical quality, the meaning, the passion, the essential spirit of his poetry with some of the Greeks. We have an idea that there was nothing particularly Greek in his mental, moral, or spiritual composition. But he was a great poet, and always a critic worth heeding.

SOME NEW BOOKS ON CULINARY ART

Fireless Cooking, Camp Cooking, and Cooking for a Limited Family Considered in Recent Volumes.

WE are busy about many matters as the years roll along, and each of us has his favorite, or at least his engrossing, pursuit. In the same way the world has considered now one thing and now another as a necessity for happy living. A lady's favor in the helmet and success in the tourney or at hand-to-hand combat had their day. Country idyls, al-fresco life, and romantic love had theirs. Star gazing or a monastic existence was popular once. War, love, and wisdom all had and have their votaries. But one thing has remained invariably important, coming to us hoary with the centuries, downy with the bloom of youth; interesting all the cycles of mankind itself and of man individually; this one supreme thing is, of course, cooking. There lies man's unfailing interest. Its literature is old and fine, mixed with much philosophy, steeped in the arts; yet perhaps never sufficiently honored. Wonderful old treatises on the building of pasties and the brewing of drinks have been sent down by elder generations for our perusal and our tables. We can see how whole oxen were roasted for a race who would have looked askance at our raw food and vegetarian diet. Gargantuan days those, before the time of fads or of babies brought up on pasteurization, or of gas ranges on breakfast foods. Yet now as then the world crowds three times a day to eat, and wives and mothers, and even wild suffragettes, still find a cook book the most useful if not also the most pleasant reading in the world.

Therefore the writing of these homilies continues, and three of the last arrivals, to the great culinary shelf have just come to hand. These are on special phases of the mighty subject, and are each excellent in their line. The title of the first seems a misnomer; fireless cooking, forsooth? Go to! It has a sound like loveless marriage, harmless whisky; even wireless telegraphy. And, indeed, in its almost magic characteristics it resembles this latest triumph of science.

Cooking by retained heat has been in use for some time, but the literature on the subject has been almost nil. In the present book Miss Mitchell has given the most careful directions for the use of the hay-box, either home made or in one of its many commercial forms. Its usefulness to the overworked housewife, to the studio dweller, to the boarding-house keeper can hardly be overrated. Full directions for the cooking of almost every article of food are to be found in this book; and the work is accomplished at the least possible expense and with the slightest amount of trouble. Everything is told in the clearest way, and a lot of additional information as to cuts of meat, the use of inferior cuts made possible by the slow cooking, how to tell storage from fresh-killed meat, and many other matters fill up the pages. An excellent item is the giving of quantities suitable for many people, so that small restaurants may make use of the recipes. Also menus of dinners which can be put in the cooker in the morning and be ready for the evening meal without further trouble.

Cooking for two is one of those fillers of a long-felt want which tend to materially lighten life's burdens. It is a mine for delicious dishes of a quantity sufficient for two persons, and various to a degree. There are numerous illustrations, and the values of the different foods are given, so that the young housekeeper may feed her husband and herself with the greatest possible wisdom as well as toothsomeness. Menus for a week in each month of the year are included, with some good general advice. Altogether this is a book a copy of which should be on every bride's list of desirable gifts.

The last book has all the glamour of the woods about it. Camping sounds good to one in June, and with this little volume any one with a fair modicum of brains ought to make a success of it. The whole detail of camp life receives attention, and all that is needed to make a stay in the woods enjoyable is succinctly described, from boots to character. There are plenty of recipes for cooking camp food. One is told just how to make a fire and an oven, how to pitch a tent; nothing is neglected.

With these three books, all the terrors of cooking in whatever environment should pass away. We recommend them as the best of Summer reading and Summer practice.

AMONG THE AUTHORS.

GERTRUDE ATHERTON has left her home in the mountains near San Francisco and expects to spend the Summer in the latter city, where she is busy writing her next book. "No place could be better for work," writes Mrs. Atherton from her present home in San Francisco's "burnt district," "and I get the full force of the Summer winds. San Francisco may be a vile climate from the pleasure seeker's point of view, but it is very crisp and bracing and never hot."

Edgar Beecher Bronson, author of "The Reminiscences of a Ranchman," who recently returned to this country from a ten months' hunt in the Nairobi region, has just written up his African experiences, which will probably be published in book form this Fall. Besides his exploits as a traveler, Mr. Bronson has been prominent in aeronautic ventures. One of his earliest balloon ascensions was made at Madison Square Garden about thirty years ago.

Ellis Parker Butler, author of "Pigs Is Pigs," &c., appeared this week as manager of the carnival and circus given for the benefit of the Flushing (L. I.) Hospital, June 17, 18, and 19. Two years ago a similar circus in the same town cleared over $18,000, above all expenses. Over 125 organizations are taking part this year, and the active staff working with Mr. Butler is placed at over 1,000 people.

Robert Grant, author of "The Chippendales," besides having a large law practice, has been a Judge of the Probate Court and of the Court of Insolvency for Suffolk County, Mass., since 1893, and Water Commissioner for Boston for the last five years. Many of his friends wonder when he finds time to write his novels.

Mrs. Williamson, author of "Set in Silver," recently came to this country for a two weeks' visit, most of which she spent in a study of slum life in New York. This she did in order to gather material for her forthcoming novel, "The Marquis of Loveland," the opening scenes of which are laid in the slums.

Eugene Paul Metour, author of "In the Wake of the Green Banner," has served in the French army in Algeria and has his knowledge of that country and people at first hand. He has lived in the United States for the last six years. By profession he is a civil engineer.

Ralph Barton Perry, author of "The Moral Economy," just published, is Assistant Professor of Philosophy at Harvard University. He is a graduate of Princeton and received the degrees of M. A. and Ph. D. from Harvard.

Major Gen. A. W. Greely, United States Army, author of "Handbook of Alaska," is the first volunteer private soldier of the civil war to reach the grade of Major General in the regular army.

Harold Howe has just established for Doubleday, Page & Co. an Illustration Service Bureau, which is said to handle over a million photographs.

William Dana Orcutt has opened his Summer cottage on Cape Cod, Mass. During the Winter Mr. Orcutt resides in Boston.

FOR AMATEUR ART CRAFTERS.

Those who wish to take up art work in metals for their own pleasure will find much instruction and guidance in F. Alexander's "Art Crafting in Metal for Amateurs: Being the Art of Ornamenting Thin Metal with Raised and Pierced Designs." (The Fort Hill Press, Boston, $1.50.) The author gives first a slight sketch of the art of working in metal from Biblical times down to the present, goes on to a consideration of the various materials that can be used, then describes the appliances and tools that are necessary, and tells how to prepare the work. Other chapters are devoted to the methods employed in executing the various kinds of work, to forming, finishing, and framing, and to the subject of designs. A great number of illustrations, showing tools, designs, and finished work, add to the helpfulness of the volume.

MRS. ATHERTON FREES HER MIND.

Some Caustic Comments Upon Publishers, Authors, and Critics Contained in a Highly Interesting Letter to The Saturday Book Review—Registers a Protest Against Misplaced Adjectives and Over Praise—Takes Issue with Mr. Filson Young.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

IT is one of the phenomena of American literature that while the writing of fiction improves almost from year to year there is no appreciable improvement in criticism. We are told that the standard of the "General Reader," (who seems to occupy toward literature something of the same position that the "Plain People" do to the Society columns of the press) has shot up so high during the last twenty years that even trash is of a far better quality than formerly. Certainly the short stories which appear in the first-class magazines are almost uniformly good, and, artistically, above reproach; while even those of the cheaper monthlies are often excellent, or at all events manage to be readable without the old sensational devices.

But having had some experience of critics, I do not attribute this new fastidiousness on the part of the public to the reviewer, but to the natural taste of the American people, developed by universal schooling, many, cheap, (or free,) libraries, the increasing number of first-rate writers, and the good style in which the best newspapers are written. Even the sensational papers often employ reporters of distinct talent, whose "stories" of daily events are as well turned out as magazine fiction.

But while the public taste has indubitably improved, and writers are popular to-day, who, fifteen or twenty years ago, would not have sold a thousand copies, this failure of the critic to keep pace with the general march of intellect, retards development in a measure by confusing standards, and leaving a man of natural taste to grope for the best; when a fine critical judgment, impartial and impersonal, expressed by those who have signed their names long enough to become authorities, might set him on the right path at once.

The majority of "Best sellers" (hideous expression) deserve their popularity and the newspaper praise they receive, for in this weary world, fiction is a godsend, and as to be popular it is necessary, above all things, to be interesting, the most impatient scoffer may be sure that no best seller is dull. It is not to any one's success that I would take exception, therefore, but I do strongly object to the misuse of terms applied by both the publisher's "writer ups," and the reviewers, who, I take it, prefer to make sure of retaining their positions by recommending strictly orthodox fiction, rather than to improve the artistic appreciation of the public.

The latter weakness might be pardoned if they would let the word "art" alone. Take such books, for instance, as two of recent date, "Katrine," and "The Inner Shrine." The very fact that they contain all the elements of popularity, makes it the more unjust, both to the public and to those authors who, indifferent to critics and monthly lists of "best sellers," are making a consistent attempt to write literature, that books of this sort should be heralded with adjectives none too strong to be applied to the most profound psychological novel, and to work of the highest creative order. A recent article yclept "The Art of Elinor McCartney Lane," (writen, no doubt, by a friend of the author for THE TIMES, which probably reaches more readers of fiction than any literary publication in the country) was full of misapprehensions of the mere word "art." "Seeking always for the right word, the one word," "hesitating months before surrendering her book, that the construction, characterization, and style, should be absolutely perfect and rank her with the greatest of living novelists," we read elsewhere. More was never said of Maupassant. As a matter of fact, it is long since I have read a book so thoroughly inartistic as Mrs. Lane's. Dramatic allusions that lead to nothing, meaningless shifting of scene, a racing, leaping method of construction that did not even pause to build bridges, a clumsy machinery in which events are pulled about to fit preconceived incidents, are a few of its offenses. And as the book was bound to be popular, notwithstanding its defects, it was not at all necessary to asure a puzzled public, always, in this progressive age, seeking education, that it was a work of the highest art. It is a story full of the winsome charm of the author's personality; the characters, if taken from books rather than from life, are simpatica; it is interesting, breathlessly so, and it ends well for those that like weak men; and most women do. But it is a thousand miles from being a work of art, and it was unfair to boom it as such.

"The Inner Shrine" is another sinner. It is a rattling good story; its careful writing is seasoned with epigram; it is rapid in its movement, with an abundance of dramatic situations; it has a society flavor and a happy ending. Again the publishers might feel confident of a vast sale without protesting to the immense numbers that subscribe to their serial publications that it is a great novel, a work of originality and power, a searchlight thrown upon life and the human heart, or some such stuff. But while the publishers, in this day of keen competition, with every other publisher announcing that every new novel is "great" or "distinguished," might be forgiven, (for bread is bread,) there is no excuse for the critic that praises such a charming light novel as a work of art, and extols it particularly because one scene succeeds another as rapidly as those of a play, "without one superfluous word." I have read the last extolment repeatedly and wondered if these people, whose duty it is to guide the public taste, even guess that they are using the term which should be applied to a good play and a bad novel. A novel without a single superfluous word is not a novel at all, but a long story. All great novels contain some kind of philosophy (generally undiscovered until the author is in his grave), which entails analysis, reflections, little incidents as well as big ones, a background as carefully painted in as the characters, and a leisurely style. It is true that a leisurely style is often associated with dullness, for good reasons, but never when the writer is a master of his art. It is quite conceivable, however, that it must always be obnoxious to a hurried and jaded reviewer; he is naturally grateful for the good galloping story, well written enough to praise, and above all with no profundity to put him out of conceit with himself.

I will venture to guess that "The Inner Shrine" is by a playwright, for it is constructed on the lines of the drama, and can be turned into dramatic form with little of the agonies which must beset playwrights when transposing most best sellers into plays. But here again all the puppets are pulled about to fit the various dénouements, therefore it is not a work of art, for it purports to be a novel, and if the imagined story is not logical, and not written along the lines of life, it is unworthy of being called anything but a good yarn. A good yarn exactly describes "The Inner Shrine"; but the rhetoric invoked in its booming leaves nothing to be said for good novels when they do appear, and retard the cultivation of the reader.

If publishers, and amiable critics, would visit the lending libraries day after day, they would realize how superfluous is this violation of their literary consciences (which we will assume they possess.) Here in San Francisco, for instance, the leading library, where I go almost daily for reference, not only has its shelves as packed with fiction as before the great fire, but the tables are laid out with all the novels and stories of the past two years, that the subscriber may waste as little time as possible. And many of these subscribers come every day. One may easily imagine the amount of fiction that must be published in order to satisfy them, or how necessary it is to assure them that novels are works of art. Let them be convinced that the book selected by the publisher for his season's success is more interesting and romantic than the general, that it has raised to a slightly higher power, certain qualities that he (or let us at once say she) likes, that it ends well, that it is nicely written, that it contains information upon subjects with which she is already familiar but would like to see more of, that it is laid amid scenes endeared to the reader through long association, and the book will sweep the country without overworking the adjectives and critical phrases originally invented for serious writers.

And while Mr. Filson Young said a good many absurd things in his recent interview with THE TIMES he held stoutly to one point that is gospel truth, although we Americans despair of its ever being taken seriously by that guardian of the general reader, the good old orthodox reviewer. Every work of fiction, the question of its power to interest disposed of, should be judged by the artistic standard alone, without the slightest reference to its morals. Fiction from its dawn has been conceded to the plane of Art, there, in the last instance, to build its permanent abode or be flung out neck and crop: it has never taken rank with sermons, settlement work, or family prayers. Every novel in the whole history of literature from "Tom Jones" down, every short story from Boccaccio's down, has survived because of its proximity to the apex of the artistic standard, never in a single instance on account of its good morals. If our critics would chew the cud of this fact, they, and, in consequence, their flocks, would show a vast improvement. Nobody in the English-speaking world today wants to write a "Tom Jones," a "Decameron," or even anything approaching "Une Vie." We demand subtlety, refinement, the difficulties of the secondary method: in our most audacious flights there is really nothing to alarm anybody with whom "the purity of American Literature" has not become a fetich; and these alarmists know that the almost literally translated works of the French authors, notably the baldly realistic novels of Maupassant, never remain on the shelves of the public libraries for two days in succession. But all that is foreign to the trend of this article, and has been said many times before.

Mr. Filson Young made a strange assertion—that is, if he is in a position to know. I do not mean his statement that we have produced no first-rate fiction, for no country save our own believes that any country save itself is first-rate in any respect whatever; no, not that, but his assertion that we read English fiction and the English do not read ours. This is wholly untrue. We read two or three English novelists widely and consistently, a larger number spasmodically. American authors make a far better showing in England, and are welcomed with avidity because of their freshness of touch and subject, their lack of padding or of imitation of old models. Crawford, Mark Twain, Mr. Howells, Mr. James, Bret Harte, James Lane Allen, Frank Norris, Jack London, Mrs. Wiggin, Mary Wilkins, Mrs. Wharton, Mary Johnston, Mrs. Deland, Winston Churchill, Owen Wister, and, I do not hesitate to add, for I have held my public over there for ten years or more, myself, are popular in England. Some of these authors have captured the British public with one book only, and then been rejected; but all have received cordial recognition; and few English novels have met with a more enthusiastic reception on their own heath than "The Virginian," Mrs. Wiggin's "Rebecca," and the first short stories of Mary Wilkins. As for our magazines they have long been the fashion, while the British monthlies, barring the sensational ones, barely sell enough to keep them alive. Nearly every year one of the famous old publications goes to the wall, while ours are on every table.

It is a curious fact that with scarce ever an exception only fiction of the better sort finds favor in any country save its own. The sensational writers seem attuned only to certain mental characteristics of their own race, whereas those that aim at the highest standard are related all over the earth, and find response in the best class of readers everywhere.

I have not the faintest hope that this protest will do any good. Publishers will go on cheapening the adjectives intended for literature by applying them to their yarns, and the critics will continue to praise a book for qualities it does not possess, because certain phrases look well in print, and the book has tickled a weary palate and recommended itself to the puritan ghosts not yet exorcised from the American brain. But I continue to protest, because somebody should, and nobody else ever does.

GERTRUDE ATHERTON.

THE SWORD OF THE LORD

A Romance of the time of Martin Luther.

By JOSEPH HOCKING
12mo. Net $1.25

"LACK OF HUSTLING PUBLISHERS

Hundreds of dry-as-dust novels are thrown on the market every year. I sometimes think that a lot of publishing managers fail to earn their salaries. Why don't the publishers make more strenuous efforts to pick up more 'ten notchers'? I happen to call to mind an English author whose books are among the best sellers across the water and yet not half of them are published in America. I have wandered among the book stores of London and seen volumes of Joseph Hocking everywhere. I have read nearly all of his works with pleasure, for Mr. Hocking is a fascinating writer, but I am getting tired of having to send to England for them. Why don't some American publishers wake up?"

AMONG THE MAGAZINES.

Interesting Contributions by W. D. Howells, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, and Others of Prominence in Harper's—Cleveland's Famous Venezuelan Message—Many Important Articles Noted in the First Installment of Magazine Contents for July.

THE tables of contents of the July magazines, the first installment of which appears to-day, present a varied and interesting selection of articles. W. D. Howells, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Charles Egbert Craddock, and Jack London appear among the contributors in Harper's. William Archer, the well-known English critic, writes on the "Black and White in the South" for McClure's, and the same magazine has an interesting account of "Cleveland's Venezuelan Message," written by George F. Parker.

Cesare Lombroso tells what he knows of the subject in "What I Think of Psychic Research," in Hampton's. "The Elimination of Danger at Sea" is the appealing title of an article by John R. Binns in The Cosmopolitan. Sewell Ford in the Metropolitan writes on "The Vacation Disease." The thought of the vacation season reminds one that the periodicals furnish much admirable Summer reading, the importance and varied character of which are best determined by a perusal of the tables of contents, which follow:

NEW YORK BOOK ANNOUNCEMENTS

George Meredith, Dumas, Paine, List, Lola Montez in New Biographies—Hudson in Fiction—Prose Classics.

AN exhaustive volume on the subject of Nelson is just being published by E. P. Dutton & Co. under the title "Nelson and Other Naval Studies." The book is by James R. Thursfield, M. A., and consists of ten essays, a number of which have already appeared in various English periodicals. Among the subjects taken up by Mr. Thursfield are "The Anniversary of Trafalgar," "Trafalgar and the Nelson Touch," "The Life of Nelson," "Paul Jones," "The Higher Policy of Defense," &c.

A number of other books are promised for immediate publication by the Duttons, among them a work on "Drugs and the Drug Habit," by Harrington Saintsbury, M. D., F. R. C. P. This is an illustrated volume and deals with its subject from a historic point of view, as well as entering upon a discussion of such practical themes as the rational basis of drug treatment, the psychic basis of drug treatment, the curative treatment of the drug habit, &c. Three of the forthcoming Dutton books are of a religious character: "New Things and Old in St. Thomas Aquinas: A Translation of Various Writings and Treatises of the Angelic Doctor," with an introduction by H. C. O'Neill; "An Historical Introduction to the Marprelate Tracts: A Chapter in the Evolution of Religious and Civil Liberty in England," dealing with the first thirty years in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, by William Pierce, and "The Life and Times of Master John Hus," embracing a period from 1369 to 1415, illustrated with four photogravures and a map, by Count Lützow.

Two books published this month by the Duttons are: "Six Masters in Disillusion," comprising papers on Prosper Merimee, Fontenelle, Ferdinand Fabre, Huysmans, Maeterlinck, and Anatole France, by Algar Thorold. "Sixty Years in the Wilderness" is by Henry W. Lucy. ("Toby" of Punch,) and consists, as its sub-title explains, of "Some Passages by the Way," illustrative of the experiences of a London journalist. Mr. Lucy's reminiscences, dedicated to "Whitelaw Reid, Journalist and Statesman," contain chapters on Charles Dickens, Cecil Rhodes, Chamberlain, Henry Irving, Gladstone, Du Maurier, Mark Twain, Roosevelt, &c.

An unusual bibliographical work is on this month's list of the Dutton importations. It aims to give a complete summary and description of "The First Printed Translations Into English of the Great Foreign Classics." The compilation has been done by William J. Harris, A. R. S. L., and is intended to serve as a supplement to text books of English literature. The subject matter appears under a title index and an index of authors.

A new book by Hosea Ballou Morse, entitled "The Guilds of China," is shortly to be published by Longmans, Green & Co. Mr. Morse is the author of a recently published work on "The Trade and Administration of the Chinese Empire." In his forthcoming book, which is fully illustrated, is given an account of the Guild Merchant, or Co-hong, of Canton, together with a description of the workings of the Chinese guild system.

This week Longmans, Green & Co. are publishing the authorized translation, by Harry W. Morse of Harvard University, of Wilhelm Ostwald's "Fundamental Principles of Chemistry."

Emile Zola in English.

A complete edition of the works of Emile Zola is in course of preparation by B. W. Dodge & Co. The set will include, according to the present plans of the publishers, not only all the Zola novels which have already been translated into English, but this author's voluminous critical and dramatic work as well, much of which is comparatively unknown to the English and American reader. About twenty-five volumes of Zola's fiction will probably appear first in this promised edition. Each of these volumes will contain a critical preface, and the whole work, it is said, will receive careful editorial attention.

As a further installment to their series known as "Shakespeare's England," Duffield & Co. will publish, probably in the Fall, "The Shakespeare Allusion Book," in two octavo volumes. This work will contain all the known references to Shakespeare and his plays before the close of the seventeenth century. For the first time these "allusions," originally connected by Dr. Ingleby, Miss L. Toulmin Smith, and Dr. Furnivall, will be arranged in chronological order and supplemented with material not heretofore included.

The Geology of New York.

This week Henry Holt & Co. are publishing a third and greatly enlarged edition of "The Geology of the City of New York," by L. P. Gratacap of the American Museum of Natural History. The book includes descriptions of the geology of Brooklyn, Manhattan, and Long Island, and is based on recent investigations. Appearing at the same time with this publication is Prof. Kenneth McKenzie's edition for colleges of "Ruy Blas."

New editions are being published by the Holts of Walter Prichard Eaton's and Elise Morris Underhill's "Runaway Place," and Lottie Blair Parker's "Homespun." The fifty-ninth edition of Anthony Hope's "Prisoner of Zenda" is also being printed. This book, illustrated by Charles Dana Gibson, was originally printed fifteen years ago, and has passed through a large number of cheap as well as regular editions.

Hendrik Hudson in Fiction.

Next week Doubleday, Page & Co. expect to bring out a romance having for its subject Hendrik Hudson and his discoveries in America. The book is by Ford Madox Hueffer, author of "English and the English," &c., and is called "The Half Moon." The earlier scenes of Mr. Hueffer's story are laid in the ancient town of Rye, England. The personality of Hudson, his ambitions as an explorer, and the New World adventures which lent a romantic interest to his entire career, naturally form the main theme of the book, which is calculated to have an additional timely interest in view of the approaching Hudson tercentenary celebration.

Another of Doubleday, Page & Co.'s novels promised for next week is by Mary Dillon, author of "Rose of Old St. Louis," &c., and is called "The Patience of John Morland." The story is one which involves various personages in the Administration of President Jackson, and incidentally depicts that period of American history. There are four illustrations in color by Charles M. Relyea. At the same time as the foregoing will be published, an additional volume in the Kipling Pocket Leather edition, "From Sea to Sea," and "House Plants," by Parker Thayer, described as "a manual of the best plants for house cultivation and indoor decoration, giving foliage and flowers all Summer and Winter; their raising from seed and home propagation," &c.

Apropos of the Paine centenary, George P. Putnam's Sons are publishing this week a one-volume edition of Moncure D. Conway's "Life of Thomas Paine." This book was originally published, in two volumes, in 1892, when it was welcomed by historical critics as the definitive Paine biography. Another reprint appearing this week is "The Economic Interpretation of History," containing the substance of lectures delivered at Oxford University in 1887, by James E. Thorold Rogers, M. P.

Two books published by the Putnams this week are the fourth and final volume of Gabriel Hanotaux's "Contemporary France," and "English Literature in the 19th Century: An Essay in Criticism," by Laurie Magnus, M. A., author of "An Introduction to Poetry," &c. The first of these is translated by John Charles Tarver, M. A., and covers the period from 1878 to the end of 1900. M. Hanotaux's entire work forms a record of the diplomatic ventures of the great powers of Europe during the last thirty years, and is said to contain many new documents and explanations of various international problems. Mr. Magnus's work is dedicated "by permission" to George Meredith, and, as its author explains in his preface, does not pretend to be an encyclopedic treatment of its subject, but is rather a general survey of literary achievement and tendencies marking the period from 1784 to the present time.

The Dumas Memoirs.

The last volume of the "Memoirs of Alexander Dumas" has just been published by the Macmillan Company. The entire series is in six volumes, from which, in 1891, two small volumes of extracts were published in English, the only glimpse afforded of this famous autobiographical record until now. The "Memoirs" in their entirety have been translated by Mrs. Waller and contain an introduction by Andrew Lang. The volume just issued, a book of more than 600 pages, covers a period of two years, 1832 and 1833.

The latest volume in the Macmillans series of "color books" is "Inns of Court" by Cecil Headlam, with twenty full-page paintings by Gordon Home. The book describes the origin of the inns of London, the Knights Templar, their Round Church, the Middle and Inner Temple Inns and others.

The following books have just been published by the Fleming H. Revell Company: "A Life for a Life," by Henry Drummond, F. R. S. E.; "Thessalonians and Corinthians," by Prof. R. Mackintosh, an additional volume in the series of pocket commentaries, edited by Principal A. E. Garvie, D. D., and known as the "Westminster New Testament"; a new large-type edition of "The Twentieth Century New Testament," and "The Life of George Grenfel, Congo Missionary and Explorer," by George Hawker.

This week John Lane Company publishes a biography by Edmund B. d'Auvergne of Lola Montez, the famous dancer of the middle of the last century. This amazingly beautiful woman, who died in New York in 1861 and was buried in Greenwood Cemetery, counted among her ardent admirers such men as Nicholas I. of Russia, Liszt, and Dumas. She is said to have exerted so dominating an influence over King Ludwig I. of Bavaria and his affairs as to arouse a popular clamor, resulting in her expulsion from Munich. The present biography aims to give a picture of the habits and opinions of some of the most prominent people of the nineteenth century, as well as a description of Lola's adventures in the United States. The title by which Lola Montez was known in Bavaria was the Countess of Landsfeld.

World's Prose Classics.

"The Best of the World's Classics" is the title of a work in ten volumes which Funk & Wagnalls expect to publish this Fall. These volumes will contain what their editor in chief, Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, considers to be the best specimens of prose from the greatest books in the world. These specimens have been arranged chronologically by countries, beginning with Greece and then taking up Rome, Great Britain, Continental Europe, and America. For inclusion in the collection Senator Lodge has selected the work of about 240 authors. For these selections biographical and explanatory notes have been prepared to the number of about 1,200. Francis W. Halsey is associated with Senator Lodge in the editorial management of the work.

A novel by Edward Bedinger Mitchell entitled "The Shadow of the Crescent" is published this month by the Frederick A. Stokes Company. The story "deals with a mystery and its hero is an American." The recent revolution in Turkey furnishes some of the incidents upon which the novel is based.

William Hanna Thomson's "What Is Physical Life?" is published this week by Dodd, Mead & Co. Dr. Thomson is the author of "Brain and Personality," a work which dealt in a popular way with some of the marvels of psychology. In his new book he considers, from the same standpoint, many of the problems involved in the physiological science of the day, such as, to give the titles to some of his chapters, "Reproduction and Heredity," "Present Status of the Darwinian Theory," "Unicellular Micro-organisms," "The Metazoa," "As to Ourselves," &c.

The Cobbett of Tariff Reform.

A "Life of Friedrich List," by Margaret E. Hirst, late scholar of Newnham College, Cambridge, is being published this month by the Scribners. This biography includes List's "Outlines of American Political Economy," and has an introduction by F. W. Hirst, editor of The Economist. Friedrich List has been described as the Cobbett of tariff reform. He was the founder of the German Zollverein and a strong advocate of the American system of protection. The present volume of memoirs is one of the first of the kind to come within reach of the American reader. In its preparation access has been had to an interesting collection of List's papers and manuscripts among the municipal archives at Reutlingen, List's native town, and from these papers and other sources a complete account is given of List's English and American experiences.

By the end of the month the Century Company will publish "Stories of the Great West," by Theodore Roosevelt, with illustrations by Frederic Remington and others. These stories are from Mr. Roosevelt's earlier books of Western life, and are intended for supplementary reading in schools.

Two books on the Harpers list recently reprinted are Elinor Macartney Lane's "Katrine" and Booth Tarkington's "Cherry."

HISTORIC OLD RHINEBECK.

Local histories rarely have much more than a local interest. The old town of Rhinebeck, however, first settled in 1702, is deserving of more than a local mention in view of the approaching celebration of the exploration of the Hudson River by Henry Hudson, and of its connection with some of the oldest families in the Hudson Valley, as the Livingstons, Beekmans, and Kips. It has a history dating back to the purchase of Indian lands by Dutch settlers in 1686; and the first house on this patent, still standing, was built in 1700. There were German settlers from the Palatinate in the early eighteenth century, and they did much toward bettering the character of the place and in bringing many of the names which still survive among its inhabitants.

Mr. Howard Morse, in his book, "Historic Old Rhinebeck," (Rhinebeck, N. Y., published by the author,) has collected much historical lore relating to the earlier and later records of the town, which sometimes has more than a merely local interest.

THE GREAT LAKES.

DR. CURWOOD'S "Great Lakes" (G. P. Putnam's Sons) is written with such sympathy and energy that interest would be compelled if it were not felt spontaneously. His theme is the American inland seas, the Americans who build and sail American boats upon them, the American cities which line their shores, and the American resources which are thus developed not only on them but far from them. Mr. Curwood is American himself from turret to foundation stone, so to speak, and it is with him a personal grievance and sorrow that so few of his countrymen know of the facts which he places before them so eloquently. Who knows that these fresh-water steamships are as big as the average salt-water boats and as elegant as any in the world? Why should anybody go to Europe when he can travel so much more cheaply and commodiously in his own country, of which he is so ignorant? Who knows that the greatest shipping port in the world is in the interior of the American Continent and that along these fresh-water highways passes six times as much freight as passes the Suez Canal annually? Each year these unconsidered vessels carry freight enough to load a railway train reaching around the world, with enough over to reach to Chicago and back again to New York.

Such are the topics which Mr. Curwood develops with an imagination and an ingenuity which carries his reader racing along as through a novel. He narrates careers of self-made men more dazzling than any novelist can imagine or depict, so much does truth surpass fiction. He describes mining and carrying ore in the same glowing language as that which he uses to depreciate salt water commerce, because it diverts attention from the American commerce, which is the child of his affection. He describes the building of the lake steamers in words which seem to make their construction a feat comparable with the construction of Cunarders or White Star liners. His book is sumptuously printed, has seventy-two interesting illustrations, and none too good a map.

Often it is painful to modest persons to hear the eagle scream, but if it must be done it is well to have it done judiciously, with citation of facts and with an ingenuous assumption that the boast is equally agreeable to all. Mr. Curwood will find few censorious critics in the United States, but he would not insure the lives of any good British or Canadian cousins who might feel disposed to be cross about the calm thrusting into the background the fact that of all the lakes Michigan alone is within American—meaning United States—soil, and that be the commerce of the lakes whatever it may be, is not all of it our own? Still, it is possible to add that the contrast between the two shores and the manner of their respective developments rather adds to than detracts from the piquancy of the presentation of the case.

Frances Boyd Calhoun.

The death of Frances Boyd Calhoun this month is reported from Covington, Tenn. Mrs. Calhoun was the author of "Miss Minerva and William Green Hill," a little book published recently by Reilly & Britton of Chicago, which has gained a considerable popularity and is now in its fourth edition. Mrs. Calhoun was known as an occasional writer for magazines. She was forty-two years old at the time of her death.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS.

"The Bon Gaultier Ballads"—Asger Hamerik's "Opera Without Words"—Lectures of Rev. John Lord—J. F. Watson's "Annals of Philadelphia"—John Trusler's "Hogarth Moralized"—The Roses by Bendemere's Stream—Answers From and Appeals To Readers.

COMMUNICATIONS intended for this column should be written on one side of the paper only. They must contain the name and address of the writer, though, if preferred by the inquirer, initials only will be printed. While the endeavor will be made to answer all queries of interest in the order in which they are received, this cannot always be accomplished.

A. H. ROSS.—Please give through your Saturday's literary review some description of "Bon Gaultier," who published a book of ballads in 1858 of a light character.

"The Bon Gaultier Ballads" are parodies of modern poetry, and were written by Prof. W. E. Aytoun and Sir Theodore Martin. They were reprinted from Blackwood's Magazine. Thirteen editions of the "Ballads" were published between 1855 and 1857. The pseudonym "Bon Gaultier" was used by Martin in writing for Fraser's Magazine and Tait's Edinburgh Magazine. He was born in 1816 in Edinburgh. He married Miss Helen Faucit, the actress. He has translated a number of works from the Danish, French, German, and Latin. He has written a memoir of W. E. Aytoun and lives of the Prince Consort, Lord Lyndhurst, and the Princess Alice. William E. Aytoun was born in Edinburgh in 1813 and died at Blackhills, near Elgin, in 1865. In 1845 he became Professor of Rhetoric in the university. He married a daughter of Prof. Wilson ("Christopher North") in 1849. He is best known for his "Lays of the Scottish Cavaliers" and "The Bon Gaultier Ballads." He wrote a number of other poems, a tragedy, and a novel.

LAWTON.—Kindly give me some information regarding Asger Hamerik, author or musician, and his "Opera Without Words." Is the latter a real opera or a treatise on the subject? I do not find the name in the usual places, only having seen it in some music reviews.

Asger Hamerik was born in Copenhagen on April 8, 1843. In 1860 he was sent to Berlin to perfect himself as a pianist under Bülow, but spent so much time on composition that Bülow advised him to devote himself to it. Hamerik then went to Paris and learned orchestration from Berlioz, remaining with him nearly seven years, and often directing performances of the works of Berlioz when the latter was unable to attend personally. From 1872 to 1896 Hamerik resided in America, formed an excellent orchestra, and gave a series of symphony concerts. His works include six symphonies, two choral trilogies, a requiem, four operas, and five Northern suites for orchestra.

B. R. P.—Will you kindly give me some particulars through your columns about John Lord, LL. D., author of "The Old Roman World," "Modern Europe," and "Beacon Lights of History"? In the latter books certain chapters are characterized as lectures, so I am anxious to know who he is, and what his literary status is.

John Lord was born in 1812 and died in 1894. He was graduated from Dartmouth College in 1833. He lectured in Great Britain (1843-6) on the Middle Ages, and afterward lectured more than 6,000 times in this country on various historical subjects. These lectures, which were commended by Dr. Chalmers and others, were published (1883-1896) under the title "Beacon Lights of History." From 1866 to 1876 Dr. Lord was Lecturer in History at Dartmouth College. His Modern History has been commended by The Athenaeum, Spectator, and other periodicals.

M. P. S.—Can you tell me where I can find, and the price of, Watson's "Annals of Philadelphia"?

J. F. Watson's "Annals of Philadelphia and Pennsylvania in the Olden Time," two volumes, 8vo, Philadelphia, 1857, brought $4 at the Searing sale in Boston in 1903. The 1868 edition, also two volumes, realized $3 at the Lightfoot sale in this city in 1900. The 1877 edition, three volumes, 4to, large paper copy, brought $9 at the Tillinghast sale in Philadelphia in 1906. A copy may be found in a second-hand book store.

Mrs. GEORGE L. BURKE.—I have the works of William Hogarth, 148 engravings, with many of the author's minor pieces not in any other edition, engraved in best style by Cooke & Davenport, descriptions by the Rev. John Trusler, anecdotes of author by J. Hogarth, Ireland, and others, Jan. 1, 1809. What are they worth?

John Trusler's "Hogarth Moralized" was published in 1768, "with the approbation of Jane Hogarth," widow of William Hogarth; the "Hogarth Illustrated," by John Ireland, appeared in 1791 and was reprinted in 1798 and 1806. Thomas Cook, a London engraver, published in 1806 "Hogarth Restored." We do not find a recorded sale of the 1809 edition.

F. K.—I find in an editorial of THE NEW YORK TIMES, May 24, under the heading: "Shaw and King Edward," a reference to "the roses that once bloomed by the calm Bendemere."
I remember learning as a child the poem, beginning something like this:

"There was a garden of roses by Bendemere's stream,
Where the nightingale would sing all the day long,"

but have never ascertained who is the author of it. Could you kindly help me?

The quotation to which our correspondent refers is from Thomas Moore's "Lalla Rookh, The Veiled Prophet of Khorassan," and is as follows:

"There's a bower of roses by Bendemeer's stream,
And the nightingale sings round it all the day long.
In the time of my childhood 'twas like a sweet dream,
To sit in the roses and hear the birds' song."

FRANK PHELPS.—Can you tell me the value of "The Quadrupeds of North America," by John James Audubon, F. R. S., &c., and the Rev. John Bachman, D. D., V. G. Audubon, 24 Liberty Street, New York, 1849?

"The Quadrupeds of North America," by J. J. Audubon and J. Bachman, 155 colored plates, three volumes, royal 8vo, New York, 1849-54, brought $35 at the Darrah sale in 1904. In the original parts it realized $125 at the French and Chubbuck sale in the same year.

G. F. S.—I have two books, entitled as follows: "Washington's Farewell Address to the People of the United States." Published by Carlisle, Troy, N. Y., 1810. And a collection of all the Incomparable Pieces written by Sir John Suckling. Printed by his own copies for Humphrey Moseley at the Prince's Arms in St. Paul's churchyard, 1658. Will you kindly let me know if they have any value?

There is no record of a sale of the Troy, 1810, publication by Carlisle, but an Albany issue of the same year, with portrait by Leney, has sold for $4 at auction.

"The Fragmenta Aurea: A Collection of All the Incomparable Pieces," &c., London, 1646, first edition, is worth from $15 to $25. The second edition was published in 1648. The third edition, frontispiece by Marshall, London, 1658, has sold for $5.25 and $8.50 at auction in this city.

M. C. H.—Can you give me the author of the following lines, incorrectly quoted, I believe:

"O woman! at our ease,
Coy, uncertain, hard to please,
But when anguish rends the brow,
Then our ministering angel thou."

The lines quoted are from Sir Walter Scott's "Marmion," Canto VI., stanza 30, and are as follows:

"O Woman! in our hours of ease,
Uncertain, coy, and hard to please,
And variable as the shade,
By the light quivering aspen made,
When pain and anguish wring the brow,
A ministering angel thou."

M. R. C.—Will you be kind enough to tell me who wrote and where will I find the poem "'Twas the night before Christmas"?

The poem beginning "'Twas the night before Christmas" is entitled "A Visit from St. Nicholas," and was written by Clement C. Moore. It is printed in full in "Hanaford's Household Book of Poetry," "The World's Best Poetry," edited by Bliss Carman, and in Stedman's "American Anthology."

MILDRED POCHT.—Will you kindly tell me by whom an English translation of Storm's "Immensee" is published?

Translation by B. M. Schimmelfennig, published at 50 cents by Thomas G. Crowell & Co.; Handy Literal Translation, published at 50 cents by Hinds, Noble & Eldredge; translation by I. A. Heath, published at 75 cents by T. B. Mosher of Portland, Me.

H. W. H.—Can you publish in your SATURDAY REVIEW "Rose Aylmer"? I think that is the title, and in it occurs this line: "And every virtue and every grace, Rose Aylmer, all were thine."

Ah, what the form divine!
What every virtue, every grace!
Rose Aylmer, all were thine.
Rose Aylmer, whom these wakeful eyes
May weep, but never see,
A night of memories and of sighs
I consecrate to thee."

O. F. L.—Who is the author of the poem beginning:

"The white moth in the closing bud,
The bee to the opened clover,
And the gypsy blood to the gypsy blood
Ever the wide world over."

The poem referred to in the above query is "The Gypsy Trail," by Rudyard Kipling.

V. A. H.—Can you give the verses of "How Pleasant Is Saturday Night," for which I have vainly inquired of several persons, who, like myself, can only recall the first two lines?

The poem sought for by our correspondent is as follows:

How pleasant is Saturday night
When I've tried all the week to be good,
Not spoken a word that was bad,
And obliged every one that I could.

To-morrow the sweet Sabbath comes,
Which our merciful Father hath given
That we may have rest from our work
And prepare for the Sabbath of Heaven.

JOHN HOFFMAN.—Can you tell me who wrote "Ibid," mentioned in Taine's English literature notes?

Ibid is not the name of a work, but is an abbreviation of the Latin word Ibidem, which means "in the book already mentioned." It is used to avoid the repetition of references. Thus Taine, in his notes, quotes from some work, and immediately after that quotes from the same work again. Instead of repeating the name of the book, he says Ibid, meaning that this quotation is from the same source as the preceding question.

W. T., Brooklyn.—Would you kindly tell me where I could get Samuel Drew's "Resurrection of the Human Body"?

Samuel Drew died in 1833, and his works have been out of print a long time. Copies of them turn up in auction sales of old books, and may be found in second-hand book stores.

Miss FRIEDA HERRMAN.—I am looking for any detail that can be found about a philosopher named Clombrotus, who committed suicide after reading "Plato on Immortality" in order to enjoy the blessed condition. I have not been able to find even a mention of the philosopher's name, and think perhaps Clombrotus may not be the correct name.

His name was Cleombrotus, and he was an Academic philospher of Ambracia. It is said that he jumped from a high wall into the sea after reading the "Phaedon" of Plato so that he might exchange this life for a better one. It has been suggested that he may have been a disciple of Socrates, who, Plato says, was in Aegina when Socrates died.

E. F. W.—Will you kindly tell me whether there is any history of Long Island more authentic than Ross's, and, if not, where and for what price I can secure a set of Ross's?

Consult Wood's "First Settlement of the Several Towns on Long Island," (1865,) Thompson's "History of Long Island," (1845,) Furman's "Antiquities of Long Island, with Bibliography," (1875,) Flint's "Early Long Island," (1896,) the "Annual Reports of the Long Island Historical Society," and H. R. Stiles's "History of Brooklyn." P. Ross's "History of Long Island" in three volumes was published at $18 by the Lewis Publishing Company, 225 Broadway, New York, in 1902.

S. R. DOUGHTY.—Will you kindly tell me whether I can obtain a copy of "The Rehearsal," by the Duke of Buckingham, in any modern editions of old plays?

It is included in English reprints, thirty volumes, by Edward Arber, London, 1868-71. A set of these works, printed on large paper, brought $44.50 at the De Forest sale in this city in 1904.

M. D. H.—Will you please tell me the probable value of sixty-nine volumes of Blackwood's Edinburgh Review, beginning with April, 1817, and ending with June, 1831.

Nos. 1-70 of Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine sold for $14 at auction in this city in 1906.

GEORGE STERLING.—Kindly inform me as to name and number of magazine (U. S. A.) in which appeared a sonnet by Archie Huntington, entitled "The Years." This was some time during 1908.

It was published in Scribner's Magazine for May, 1908.

Answers from Readers.

J. S. H. B.—In your issue of April 17 "M. E. C." asks for a poem containing the lines "Bird of the Greenwood, Oh! why art thou here?" &c. The lines I inclose may not be the ones required, but are so strongly suggestive I venture to send them. They were published several years ago in The Pacific Churchman, San Francisco. They were written by myself.

THE PASSENGER DOVE.

Whence upon swift wing dost thou come?
Where hast thou left thy mate, thy love—
Waiting alone in her aylvan home?

Why, oh, why dost thou linger here?
Some fond word wouldst thou fain be telling,
Some glad message my heart to cheer?

In what far sky, the purest, clearest,
Hast thou met with an angel throng?
O, was the name of my own heart's dearest
Set in the heart of their wondrous song?

O, to interpret the message tender
Of plaintive notes and thy gentle eyes—
Was it not this? Dear love, remember,
I await thee in Paradise.

Stay, sweet bird, while the sunset lingers,
Turning to crimson thy burnished breast,
Touched mayhap by those angel fingers,
Then away to thy greenwood nest.

So farewell for thy gentle mission,
For thy message of hope and love,
For one glimpse of the fields elysian,
Take my blessing, thou sweet wild dove.

C. A. D. C.—In answer to "D. B. S.": The author of "Thou Will Never Grow Old" is Mrs. Ellen Clementine Howarth. Mrs. Howarth was born in Cooperstown, N. Y., May 17, 1827. Her maiden name was Doran. Her father was Irish, her mother English. The family moved from place to place as the father could get work at calico printing. When a mere seven years old Ellen began to work. She says: "I cannot remember when I learned to read. It was, however, all I did learn at school." Through small libraries in the factory villages she had plenty of reading. At the age of eighteen she married an Englishman named Joseph Howarth, who, like her father, was a calico printer. The young couple soon settled in Trenton, N. J. Mrs. Howarth learned the trade of chair-caning. While working in a machine shop Mr. Howarth lost the use of his eyes. The family was brought to great destitution. A friend, learning their need, gave temporary relief and later more substantial aid. A comfortable home was provided for her and her family for life. This very imperfect outline of Mrs. Howarth's life is taken from a sketch of her life in a small volume called "Mrs. Howarth's Poems," published in Newark, N. J., by Martin R. Dennis, 1868. There are forty or more poems in the volume.

H. G. P.—Answering "C. S. W." in "Appeals to Readers," SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS, April 24, I recall two verses and chorus of the song, as follows:

Down by the river the log hut stands,
Where father and mother dwelt;
With the old door latch that was worn by our hands,
And the church where in prayer we knelt.

(Chorus.)

Gently down the stream,
For all that's passed is gone, you know,
And the future's but a dream.

There stands the tree that we used to climb,
And the mill with its rolling din,
And the old wharf boat there it used to float
Where the school boys went to swim.

There is a third verse which I cannot recall, but I hope some other of your readers may be able to supply it.

M. S. B.—In your department, May 22, A. B. S. inquires for information about an old Scotch ballad, "Sir James the Ross." It is printed in an old collection of ballads named "The Book of British Ballads," edited by S. C. Hall, Esq., F. S. A., printed in London, Henry G. Bohn. The leaves of my copy are yellow with age, though I cannot find any date of publication. The author of the poem in question was Michael Bruce, born 1746; died of consumption in 1767. Campbell, in his "Specimens of British Poets," says: "His friends being persons in low circumstances, he had to struggle with poverty, which, together with constitutional disease, gave a melancholy turn to his mind, and influenced the character of his writings. The poem is founded on an older ballad. Both Pinkerton and Motherwell have preserved copies of a very early ballad of the same title, from which, it is more than probable, the ideas of Bruce were copied. * * * Both Pinkerton and Motherwell were highly wroth with the modern imitator, Bruce." However, as Bruce died in 1767, he does not seem very modern to our generation. In my copy the poem is called "Sir John the Rose," but both titles are given.

THE LIGHT OF STARS.

". . . This story of the South moves along its pleasing way with just enough of the spice of life to make it truly interesting. . . . Robert March, the boy, is one of the most loveable characters of the story. His struggles with himself and his final development into a man of tempered iron make the best part of the book. The scene is laid in eastern Texas, a part of the South which has been but little used by novelists."—Minneapolis Tribune.

Answers from and Appeals to Readers.

Brooklyn; Richard A. Zerega, Yonkers, N. Y., and Caroline Bensel, New York.

B. H. M. B.—In reply to the question of Caroline Bensel in relation to the sonnet on April 23, (Shakespeare's birthday,) would say that your correspondent will find the sonnet in "Collected Sonnets of Lloyd Mifflin," it being the last of 350 published in that volume. Henry Frowde, New York and London, is the publisher. A revised edition was printed in 1905 by the Oxford University Press, 93 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Appeals to Readers.

A. C.—Can any of your readers supply me with the words of a poem called "Good Morning"? The following are a few lines:

I rise and ope the window wide,
The sun-kissed breezes charge and ride
Straight through the breach in merry rout,
And scale the walls and fairly shout:
"Good morning!"

I should also like to know something of the writer, and whether he wrote any other poems.

H. F. D.—Can any of your readers tell me who wrote, or where I can find, a little hymn the first verse of which, as nearly as I can remember, is:

Depart awhile each thought of care,
The earthly things forgotten all,
And speak my soul, thy vesper prayer
Obedient to the sacred call,

It is many years since I saw these verses. I shall be very grateful if you can find them for me.

M. D. H.—Can any of your correspondents tell me the author of or where I can find the quotation:

"Captain Baxter
Whom Miss Betty Refused
Before he Axed Her"?

M. N. D.—Can any reader of THE TIMES REVIEW tell me the author of "Christ of Galilee"? Also whether there are more than the three verses given in "Curayl" by Una Silberrand? It is a song of the hero, the keynote of his character, in fact the leitmotif of that most interesting novel. One of the verses is:

"Friend of wayfaring men,
Not beyond earthly ken,
Wept with us, laughed with us now and then—
Christ of Galilee!"

M. E. R. S.—Can any of your readers give me the words of a poem which I think is entitled "The New Little Girl in Heaven"? The first verse runs something like this:

Said the children up in heaven;
"There's a new little girl coming home to-day;
She's almost ready to fly away
From the world we used to live in.
Open them wide for this new little girl."
Said the children up in heaven.

ALFRED BLAISDELL.—Can you help me find a short poem of which I can recall but a line or two—on life and death? It deals with the impossibility of those in either state being able to understand those in the other, and the line I remember is to the effect that if one from another sphere should "come and ask us what is life

Not one of us could tell."

I have a faint idea it is by Mrs. Sangster, but not finding it in any collection of her verses to which I have access, come to you or to some of your readers for help.

Answers to Correspondents.

T. DEAN.—The poem for which you inquired was printed in THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS on April 3, 1909.

JAMES HUNTINGTON.—The quotation "For a woman is only a woman, but a good cigar is a smoke," is from Kipling's poem "The Betrothed."

C. S. F.—The poem "My Ships" was printed in THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS on April 17, 1909.

BOSTON GOSSIP OF LATEST BOOKS

Richmond and the Civil War in a New Novel—Works on Camp Cooking and Advertising.

BOSTON, June 18.—"City Ice," Mr. Hollis Godfrey's contribution to The July Atlantic, should interest all city readers of the magazine, unless the Boston iceman is singular in his depravity. Why pestilence did not long ago sweep away all consumers of iced-water is one of the mysteries of life to those who study his ways and the ways of the little thieves who cluster about his cart, wheresoever it pauses. Two other papers will be read with attention, Mr. Hayes Robbins's "The Church and Social Movements" and "An American Merchant Marine," by "A British Marine Officer." "Champlain, the Herald of Washington," by Mr. Charles M. Harvey, suggests a novel view of the French explorer. The magazine enters upon its new volume with pleasant prospects.

Although so many persons have lately written upon the art of advertising it seems strange to find Prof. George L. Kittredge among them, but in his preface to Mr. Lawrence Lewis's "The Advertisements of the Spectator" he speaks of the book as bringing us into the closest possible contact with the daily life of our ancestors, "because although literary men may write for posterity the advertiser must trade upon the present." Therefore one comes closer to the advertiser than to any other writer.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. will publish the English edition of "Aunt Jane of Kentucky," which is to follow the fourteenth American edition. The author has completed her second set of Aunt Jane stories for publication in the Autumn by Messrs. Little, Brown & Co.

The coincidence between the issue of Mr. Hollis Godfrey's "The Man Who Ended War" and the discovery of electric rays capable of destroying metal, is now duplicated by the announcement that a vessel has been built of wood with wood fastenings throughout, like the premises in which Mr. Godfrey's hero experimented with his terrible solvent. The solvents of metal are supposed to have no terrors to a person protected by wooden walls.

"Vest Pocket Limericks," issued anonymously, is edited by a man so serious that were his name on the title page his friends would probably ask him why he did not sue the publisher for libel, but every owner of the book may have his own special edition, for following the 112 limericks, are fourteen pages left blank to be filled according to taste. Various heads, such as "Expurgated," "My First Attempt," "Fy Wireless," "Too Good," appear on these blank pages, and, as there is space below each printed limerick for two or three clippings, the little volume may be made to hold some 500 specimens of the art ridiculing all arts.

Mr. Frank A. Bates, known in the sporting papers and magazines as "Metasiso," has added so much to that part of his book originally published in "The Amateur Sportsman and Sportsman's Magazine," that the volume now issued as "Camping and Camp Cooking" is virtually a new work. Mr. Leslie F. Bosworth contributes a chapter on cleaning fish, which is an art not a gift, as amateurs fancy, and Mr. Bates instead of furnishing the reader with his portrait, gives him a picture of the Metasiso stove, in a rough stone structure, on which the camper may boil potatoes, fry fish, make coffee and stew fruit at the same time, provided he builds it properly. Some fifty pages of recipes for cooking by camp methods are added, among them the formula for Webster's chowder, as furnished by the godlike Daniel to his friends.

Both the "Vest Pocket Limericks" and "Camping and Camp Cooking," are issued by the Ball Publishing Company, which is planning its first illustrated holiday book, "The Revel of the Toys," verses by Miss Anabel Ingalls, and pictures by Mr. John Goss. The theory that toys frolic by night is old enough, but Miss Ingalls shrewdly adds the detail that they frolic only when their small owners have been good all day, and it is hoped that little Johnny will take the hint. The pictures show the revels as they appear to his Teddy bear and his little dog, and the performances of his circus, of the frogs in his frog pond, of his building blocks, his motor car, his train of cars, the things which they do with the table and chairs are worth seeing. Each picture includes much detail and would furnish a good observation drill for kindergarten use. The book will be a thin, flat quarto printed in black and red.

Dr. Edward Everett Hale's lamented death has called attention to the number of his publishers. Ticknor & Fields and all the metamorphoses of the firm brought out his stories, and Messrs. Houghton Mifflin Company published his "James Russell Lowell and His Friends" in 1899. In 1900 Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. issued a ten-volume edition containing all the fiction that he cared to preserve, much autobiographical matter, and some sermons, speeches, and poetry, and the Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company still keeps on its list the "Family Flight" series which he and Miss Susan Hale wrote together, and also his "Story of Massachusetts," and "Boys' Heroes." The Lend a Hand Society published many pamphlets of his, and one of his last "Introductions" was written for "The First True Gentleman," published by Messrs. John W. Luce & Co.

Mr. George Cary Eggleston has given the title of "Irene of the Mountains" to his novel for Autumn publication, and it will be issued by the Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company in September. The scene of the story is Richmond immediately before and during the civil war, but the earlier chapters describe the mountain folk and their politics. The story will be illustrated by Mr. Frank T. Merrill.

"Sicily, the Garden of the Mediterranean," by Mr. Will S. Monroe, illustrated in duogravure from the author's photographs, appears in the Travel Lovers series, issued by Messrs. L. C. Page & Co.

The C. M. Clark Publishing Company is issuing two humorous books, "Mrs. De Brie Says," a series of monologues, by Miss Florence V. Saunders, and "The Thousand Leggers," by Miss Catherine Winspear Moss, a tale of travel.

STEPHENSON BROWNE.

American Industrial Society.

The ten-volume "Documentary History of American Industrial Society," which has been prepared for the American Bureau of Industrial Research and Carnegie Institution of Washington, has now been finished, and the Arthur H. Clark Company of Cleveland, Ohio, will bring out the history in the Autumn. The work has been arranged as follows: Preface by Prof. R. T. Ely, and an introduction by Prof. J. H. Clark; Vols. I. and II., "Plantation and Frontier," are by Prof. U. B. Phillips; the third and fourth volumes, dealing with "Labor Conspiracy Cases, 1806-1842," are the joint work of Profs. J. R. Commons and E. A. Gilmore; Vols. V. and VI., "Labor Movement, 1820-1840," are by Prof. Commons and Helen R. Sumner, Ph. D.; Vols. VII. and VIII., "Labor Movement, 1840-1860," are by Prof. Commons, while the last two volumes, treating of the labor movement from 1860 to 1880, are by Prof Commons and John B. Andrews, Ph. D. The Analytical Index closes Vol. X. For the first time American readers will now have placed before them everything concerning industrial conditions, labor unions, strikes, wages, the relations between capital and labor, the race problem, and other points in the National industrial history. No pains have been spared to make the work exhaustive, and it includes numerous documents hitherto unknown and inaccessible and rare.

PHILADELPHIA BOOK NEWS.

THOMAS WILLING BALCH of this city, whose historical researches and studies in international law have won for him an international reputation, has just brought out in a handsome volume a reprint of some articles which he wrote for the Revue de Droit International et de Legislation Comparee. It bears the title "L'Evolution de l'Arbitrage International," and does honor to the author as well as to the publishers, Allen, Lane & Scott. The book gives an account of the gradual growth of International Arbitration from the time of the Thirty Years' War to the present day, and discusses the possibilities of its future development.

"A History of Germany, 1715-1815," by C. T. Atkinson, modern history lecturer at Exeter College, Oxford, is one of the books to be brought out in the early future by George W. Jacobs & Co. It will be richly illustrated with maps, and dealing with the conflicts which rent the German states between the death of Louis XIV. and the final overthrow of Napoleon will afford material for students.

Other Jacobs books which are announced are a new edition of Dr. J. Campbell Oman's "Cults, Customs, and Superstitions of India," a suitable companion to the author's more recent work on "Indian Life, Religious and Social," and a reprint of one of the less known but intensely interesting of Jules Verne's tales, "The Chase of the Meteor."

The Lippincotts have just published an exhaustive work on "Sanitary Engineering," originally the work of Col. E. C. S. Moore, R. E., revised and brought up to date by E. J. Silcock, President of the British Society of Engineers. It is in two volumes, exhaustively illustrated, and with many folding plates and innumerable tables and calculations for the engineer. The book is, in fact, an encyclopedia of engineering formulae and standard reference authority relating to various questions of sanitary science, and is likely to prove of especial value to American engineers in their study of the multiplying problems of sewage disposal. It takes nothing from the value of the book that it was written primarily for English engineers, because greater progress has been made in Great Britain in the questions of sanitation which are now just beginning to command attention here.

Prof. Charles Morris has added another work to the already long list of his original works and compilations, this time contributing a second volume to a series begun by the J. B. Lippincott Co. devoted to descriptions of "Home Life in All Lands." The new book, which is expected to be ready in a week or ten days, tells of the "Manners and Customs of Uncivilized Lands," and is full of curious and interesting facts about the people in the odd and out-of-the-way corners of the world.

RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE.

THE "New Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge," of which the Funk & Wagnalls Company is the publisher, is growing rapidly. Just three months after the issue of Volume II. we get Volume III., and the promise is made that the entire work of twelve volumes shall be completed in about two years.

A good many important topics are treated in the volume just issued. Seventeen pages are devoted to an article on "Christology" by Dr. David S. Schaff, there is a twelve-page article by Prof. George Gilmore on "Comparative Religion," an eight-page article by the Rev. Morton Dexter on "Congregationalists," and an article of about the same length by Dr. George James Bayles on "Church and State." In the biographical department a number of interesting personages are noticed, including Charlemagne, Charles V., Chrysostom, Confucius, Constantine the Great, Dante, and David. Among the new topics treated are "Christian Socialism" and "Communism."

Dr. Adolf Harnock contributes several important treatises, including one on the "Constantinopolitan Creed"; Prof. M. Lauterberg of the University of Berne has an article on the "Descent of Christ into Hell"; Dr. Benzinger treats on "Dancing," and Prof. Konig's contributions include a paper on "Ceremonial Defilement and Purification." Other contributors are M. R. Vincent, Victor Schultze, Prof. Frederick Wiegand, Prof. Zöckler, Dr. Albert H. Newman, Dr. C. A. Beckwith, Dr. Henry K. Carroll, Dr. Francis Driscoll, Prof. J. Frederick McCurdy, Prof. Henry Sylvester Nash, Dr. Rudolph Binder, William Henry Larrabee, Prof. Karl Mirbt, and Prof. Conrad von Orelli.

All in all, the new volume compares favorably with the earlier installments of the work in scholarship, authoritativeness, comprehensiveness, and other qualities that make for excellence in a cyclopedic work.

Growing Every Day

No one can define exactly what quality it is that makes a successful novel sell its thousands and thousands, but perhaps a few of the reasons why the year's surprising Summer success is

ARTHUR GOODRICH'S

The Lady Without Jewels

are that it is a rattling good story, full of droll humor, wholesome as sunlight, American to the core. Jane Spencer says: "A woman loves to be loved. It doesn't matter whether she's a giddy butterfly of a girl, or a drab little person like me. There are times when it seems to me that it's what women are for, to love and be loved. It sounds rather frantic, doesn't it? But it isn't frantic at all. It's true. Every woman wants real love, and there are times when she almost craves even the counterfeit."

"SENTENCE OF DEATH"—By JOHN COLLIER

Sunday, June 20, 1909

This painting, the most talked of picture in London for many months after its appearance, depicts a young man hardly in the prime of life in consultation with a specialist. After a careful diagnosis the physician has felt it his duty to inform the young man that he is suffering from a mortal disease and that but a very limited period of life is left to him. "Sentence of Death" has been called a problem picture, but it presents no problem, rather a straightforward representation of a tragedy of every-day life. The story is told with great simplicity and reserve.

Exhibited at the Royal Academy, 1908.

BUNGALOWS AND COUNTRY CLUB COTTAGES at Belle Terre
Port Jefferson, L. I.

BELLE TERRE is a lofty, beautiful peninsula comprising about 1,300 acres on the north shore of Long Island, bordering on Long Island Sound and Port Jefferson Harbor.

Probably there is no more superb, healthy, naturally lovely spot suitable for country homes anywhere in the world. There are forty miles of shaded drives, golf links, garage, livery, yacht landing, beach and bathing privileges, electricity, running water, etc., all modern conveniences.

The attractions of Belle Terre for Summer residence are singularly comprehensive. In the first place, the Belle Terre Club House affords accommodations for 100 guests. While the improved estates at Belle Terre provide sites for country homes of any size, especially attractive are the plots of from 1 to 10 acres landscaped for Bungalows and Cottages, many of which are now built and ready for occupancy.

This is a desirable opportunity to satisfactorily solve the Summer residence problem. Buy a Bungalow. Stop at the Belle Terre Club House until you are ready to occupy your Bungalow or Cottage. Enjoy the beauties of Belle Terre all the time.

Residents and purchasers must be acceptable to membership in Belle Terre Club, which insures a desirable community.

Belle Terre is near the Port Jefferson Station on Long Island Railroad. Automobile buses meet all trains. The run from New York is about 90 minutes—which gives easy accessibility. The Bungalows are along the northwest bluff shore, fronting on Port Jefferson Harbor, and must be seen to be appreciated. Admission to Belle Terre grounds is solely by card, so write us.

Prices from $4,500 to $30,000. 1 to 10 acres, including land and house.
